Shock Felt For Miles.

The first intimation people had of the disaster was a shock which was felt in Terre Haute and as far east as Brazil, Ind., and as far south as Sullivan, Ind.

The wires were blown down and it was some time before the Big Four officials here learned of the explosion.

Relief trains were ordered out from Terre Haute and Paris, Ill., and the dead and injured were taken to both cities.

The work of the rescuing party was hampered by the almost complete destruction of the train and the blazing timbers, which were ignited by the explosion.

The train left Indianapolis at 4:40 p. m., Saturday evening, with Engineer Welch and Fireman Rowland, both said to be from Mattoon, Ill.

The names of the other members of the crew are not obtainable tonight.

O. M. Armstrong, agent at Sandford stated that he thought the car contained about 800 kegs of powder. He said he was standing in the door of the station when the explosion occurred and that he at once called some section hands. They secured an engine, broke an interlocking switch and went to Paris, Ill., for a relief train. All means of communication between this city and Sandford were cut off and since the men from Sandford had not stopped to ascertain how much damage was done, the passengers received no aid until the relief trains reached the scene.

Train Mass of Flames.

The entire passenger train was a mass of flames and the relief party was able to reach only the passengers who had been either blown from the train or were able to crawl from the coaches after the explosion.

Two of the men who were reported were still alive when the relief party from this city reached the wreck, but the rescuers were unable to reach them and were compelled to stand and watch them burn.

The station at Sandford was turned into a morgue.

After the physicians from Paris, Ill., and the members of the relief party from Terre Haute arrived, the flames died down so that the men had to work by the dim light of lanterns. It is not known how many passengers were on the train, but it is said that both cars were almost full. Only about sixty have been accounted for, and it is thought a number were either killed outright or were buried under the wreckage and burned to death.

From the most definite information obtainable the freight train had just cleared the main track and had come to a standstill when the passenger started to pass it. It is thought that the concussion caused by the passenger set off the powder in the freight car.

BIG FOUR WRECK

SIXTEEN PERSONS CRUSHED OR BURNED TO DEATH.

MANY OTHERS ARE INJURED

PASSENGER COLLIDES WITH A FREIGHT AT FOWLER, IND.

MANY DEAD NOT IDENTIFIED

Dense Fog Prevents Engineer Seeing Telegraphic Block Signal—Town Turns Out to Assist With Rescue Work—Number Dead Not Known.

FOWLER, Ind., Jan. 19.—Sixteen persons were crushed or burned to death early today in a collision between the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis railroad passenger train, which left Chicago at 11:30 last night, and a freight train. Ten persons were seriously injured and several more slightly hurt.

The passenger train was running 50 miles an hour and consisted of a combination coach, two Pullman sleepers for Cincinnati, one for Indianapolis.

Destroyed by Fire.

The train was destroyed by fire except one sleeper. Seven of the dead have been identified. Eleven of the victims were burned to death in the combination coach and but two of these have been identified. With but one exception, every member of the passenger train crew perished.

The dead are as follows:

J. A. HANNON, Chicago, died on special train en route to Kankakee.

CONDUCTOR HIDDINGER, of the passenger train.

BAGGAGEMASTER MAGEE, of the passenger train.

FIREMAN OLCOTT, of the passenger train.

ELEVEN OCCUPANTS OF COMBINATION CAR, names unknown.

The Injured:

H. W. Fink, Grand Rapids, Mich., injuries serious; L. S. Lang, Chicago, slightly hurt; M. A. Creton, New York, left leg injured; D. W. Tripp, Lafayette, Ind., engineer passenger train, injuries serious; Minor Griffin, Shelbyville, Ind., fireman on freight train, seriously but not dangerously hurt; W. B. Harris, Indianapolis, both legs crushed, will die; E. P. L. Barnes, residence not given, slightly injured; H. W. Lynch, Chicago, will probably recover; John Kohble, Indianapolis, slight; W. T. Hall, Memphis, slightly. S. A. Douglass, Freeport, Ill., head badly bruised; John Meyer, New York, leg broken.

None of the passengers in the sleepers suffered serious injury.

Ran Past Block Signal.

The passenger train in the heavy fog ran by a telegraphic block signal. The engine and tender telescoped the combination coach. Seats were hurled through the roof and it was here the dead were burned, many of them beyond recognition. The crash awakened nearly every person in Fowler. Men secured axes and saws and began the work of rescue. They worked their way into the mass of wreckage caused by the tender and combination coach. Four bodies were seen protruding from among the broken seats. The faces were black as though from strangulation.

The body of Henry Price was found almost consumed by the flames which drove rescuers away. A woman in the car was heard shrieking for help, but could not be saved. The fire burned so rapidly and fiercely that the search for other victims was abandoned.

The injured, who were taken into the adjoining sleepers which had left the track but had not turned over, had to be hastily removed later, because the Pullmans were also burned.

Exact Number Dead Not Known.

This afternoon enough fragments to make eight bodies had been taken out. It is probable the exact number of victims will never be known.

The railroad officials, of whom there were a number upon the train, said there were not over 15 persons in the combination car, but passengers say there were nearly 30.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 19.—A special to the News from Lafayette, Ind., says reports received there indicate that twenty-five persons were killed in the wreck of the Big Four passenger train No. 38, near Fowler, early today, twenty of whom were cremated. Those killed, it is stated, were nearly all in the combination car which took fire and burned. The sleepers turned over.

Owing to the dense fog the engineer of the Big Four flyer was unable to see the light of the semaphore which directed him to stop, as a westbound freight had the right of way. The train dispatcher, knowing that the dense fog would prevent the trainmen from seeing the block signal, went outside and waved his lantern frantically and fired at least a dozen shots from his revolver but the trainmen went crashing by with their train and a moment later the crash came.

The tender of No. 38 telescoped the baggage car; the rear end of the tender cut through to within ten feet of the rear of the smoker.

The firemen of both trains were killed instantly, but the engineers escaped by jumping.

One man, who was pleading piteously for aid, was pinned under a car seat. He was rescued when the flames were within six feet of him.

Another man was thrown out of the window of the smoker into a ditch. These were the only two passengers rescued from the smoker. The killed included men, women and children, and all that could be seen at daybreak this morning were the smouldering skeletons

EXCITEMENT INCREASES

Germany Greatly Exercised Over Campaign Oratory.

BERLIN, Jan. 19.—The political excitement grows, particularly indoors after sundown. The great roofed gardens of the breweries, some of them with tables for 2,500 patrons, are filled nightly with persons anxious to hear campaign oratory. The Socialist meetings especially are remarkable for their enthusiasm. At all of these a police lieutenant, with helmet off and a sheet of paper in front of him, sits next to the chairman. Should the lieutenant rise and put on his helmet, it will be the signal for the meeting to be closed, and the policemen stationed upon the floor and the galleries would begin to clear the hall.

The Liberals of Bremen have sent circulars to the members of that party, urging them to avoid Socialist meetings, fearing violence at the hands of Socialist partisans. At Detmold, a Radical meeting was broken up by friends of the independent candidate, and at a railroad meeting in Berlin this week, Socialist disturbances started a fist fight.

NOT SO BAD AS REPORTED

Damage Sustained by the Training Squadron Light.

TOKIO, Jan. 20.—The damage sustained by the training squadron, which was forced to return to Yokosuka yesterday by a severe storm met after the squadron had started on a cruise to Honolulu, is not so great as at first supposed. It has been learned that the masts of nine vessels were broken.

During the storm the squadron lost six boats and 50 of the crew were injured. It is expected that the vessels will soon be ready.

TRIAL OF HIGH OFFICIALS

Criminal Neglect of Duty Is the Charge.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 19.—The trial of the assistant minister of the interior, Garke, and M. Litvinoff, chief of the department of provincial affairs in the ministry of the interior, will begin January 21 in the high court of justice on the charge of criminal neglect of duty in awarding the Ladval contract for the purchase of grain for famine sufferers. The procedure corresponds with an impeachment of public officials of the highest rank and by personal order of the emperor.

The high court of justice is officially known as the first department of the senate and consists of 13 members.

TEHERAN, Jan. 19.—The coronation of Mohammed Ali Mirza as shah of Persia took place this afternoon with impressive ceremonies and a brilliant display of oriental grandeur.

The ceremony began shortly after noon, at which hour the high court dignitaries and the foreign diplomats assembled in an anteroom, from where they were conducted to the throne room.

At the further end of this spacious apartment stood the throne flanked by rows of dignitaries in richly lined costumes.

The royal procession entered the throne room one hour after midday. At the head walked the younger brother

GRAZING FEE TOO HIGH

WOOL GROWERS PROTEST BY RESOLUTION.

Association Adjourns, Selecting Helena As Next Meeting Place. Warren Re-elected.

SALT LAKE, Jan. 19.—The convention of the National Wool Growers association, which has been in session for the past three days, adjourned tonight after passing resolutions urging legislative action favorable to the sheep industry and choosing Helena, Montana, for its next meeting place.

The most interesting feature of the last session was the contest for the next convention. Among the candidates were Salt Lake, Helena, Montana, Albuquerque, N. M.; Jamestown, Va.; New York and San Francisco. The contest narrowed down to Helena, Salt Lake and Albuquerque. Albuquerque withdrew in favor of Helena.

Officers Elected.

Senator F. S. Warren was re-elected president of the association by a rising vote. The same action was taken in the case of Dr. J. M. Wilson of Douglas, Wyo., western vice president. Colonel George E. Truesdale of Washington, D. C., was elected eastern vice president.

The following members of the executive committee were named by their delegations:

Arizona: E. S. Cosney; Colorado, J. W. Hawley; Michigan, C. Wood; Nebraska, Robert Taylor; New Mexico, S. Lunt; Ohio, A. A. Bates; Wyoming, E. J. Pell.

The executive committee was reappointed. G. S. Walker as secretary and A. J. Knollin of Chicago was elected treasurer.

Chief Forester Clifford Pinchot and his assistant, Mr. Potter, and the Salt Lake Commercial club were elected honorary members of the association.

Resolutions Adopted.

Resolutions adopted by the convention protest against the inclusion of treeless lands in forest reserves; declare the grazing fee charged for sheep higher proportionately than the fee for cattle; demand the allotment of separate districts to sheep and cattle; indorse the tariff on wool, woolen fabrics, hides, meat and meat animals; recommend that stock trains be required to run not less than 17 miles an hour including stops; urge that the bureau of animal industry see that stock is properly cared for in transit, and commend the plan of the forestry bureau to kill predatory animals on and off the forest reserves. As a compliment to John W. Springer of Denver, he is recommended for United States land commissioner, although the appointment of Richard A. Ballinger has been made.

The convention suggested amendments to a bill introduced in the senate by Senator Burkett, authorizing the president to establish grazing districts in the public domain. The convention will have the authority given the president in the bill divided between the president and the states.

IMPERIAL POWER

ADJUTANT TO BE MADE A WAR LORD.

BILL BEFORE LEGISLATURE

TO RECONSTRUCT NATIONAL GUARD OF COLORADO

WOULD OUST GENERAL CHASE

Abolishment of Brigade Headquarters Is Provided, and Adjutant Is Empowered to Spend State Money Without Consent of State Military Board.

DENVER, Jan. 19.—Brig. Gen. John Chase will be ousted as commander of the National Guard of Colorado if a bill providing for the reconstruction of that organization, pending before the state legislature, is passed.

The bill, copies of which were introduced in both branches of the assembly, provides for the abolishment of brigade headquarters and empowers the adjutant general to expend moneys of the state without the consent of the state military board, which consists of the brigadier general, the governor, attorney general, inspector general, judge advocate and adjutant general.

All expenditures of the National guard must now be approved by this board, but if the law is changed, the adjutant general may trifle away as much money as he likes without submitting his account to the military board.

Continuation of Fight.

The introduction of the bill is a continuation of the fight which has split the National guard of Colorado for years. Peace is something unknown to the militia men.

The trouble commenced when Sherman Bell, then adjutant general, tried to have Brig. Gen. Chase removed from office. A military trial was held at the state house and General Chase was found guilty on technical charges. James H. Peabody, then governor, turned down the decision of the military court because of adverse public sentiment.

When the feud between Generals Chase and Bell opened the guard divided itself, and the Chase and Bell adherents have ever since been at swords' points. Efforts have been made to strip General Chase of his authority, but it has been impossible to do so. Now the legislature is asked to continue the fight on behalf of the anti-Chaseites.

Several adjutant generals have objected to a close scrutiny of their expenditures by a military board, but much money has been saved the state by the board. Frequently the members of the board are of different political faiths, and watch all expenditures as a cat does a mouse. It is estimated that the state of Colorado was saved $150,000 by the military board during the industrial troubles in the Cripple Creek and Telluride mining districts.

"If the state legislature wants to give room for all kinds of grafts to spring up in the National Guard of Colorado, let it take away the power of the military board to audit all accounts of the adjutant general," says a member of the guard.

Numerous changes in the laws governing the guard are provided for in the bill, and a complete reorganization will take place if the bill is passed.

It has always been a disputed point whether the adjutant general or the brigadier general is in command when troops are in the field. The adjutant general is usually a person who knows nothing at all about military matters, while the brigade commander must be a thorough military man.

Storm of Protest.

A storm of protest will be called forth Monday when Senator Parks introduces a bill providing for the abolition of salaries in connection with the boards of control of state institutions.

He fathers the measure at the request of the state board of charities and correction, with whose members it originated. The corrective and charitable institutions of the state are suffering from crippled finances and the plan was to ask the legislature to turn what would accrue in salaries in a biennial period over to the actual care of inmates.

None of the salaries are large, but in two years, with expense accounts and mileage thrown in, they amount to a pretty penny.

For instance, the penitentiary commissioners draw as their combined salary, in two years $9,000, which would be a material increase in the regular appropriation allowed the penitentiary if it were turned to that account. Five of the seven institutions controlled by the state board of charities and correction have salaried boards. The two which have not are the State Home for Dependent Children and the Girls' Industrial school.

Senator Parks realizes that in introducing his bill he is going to provoke a storm. Already rumors of opposition have reached his ears, and when informally discussing the plan with his fellow senators yesterday he learned that it is to be a hard proposition to put it through.

The executive board of the Colorado Federation of Women's clubs is back of the pure food measure, and will not rest until it gets a favorable report on it.

It is practically decided that Senator Crowley shall introduce a resolution Monday calling for the expulsion of Senator Morgan. His resolution will be backed by a great many holdover Republican senators, and a time limit of ten days will be put upon the committee appointed to consider the merits of the case.

TOO MUCH GRAND

RIVER SHOULD BEAR NAME OF COLORADO.

BILL BY SENATOR TAYLOR

AS MATTER OF STATE PRIDE, CHANGE SHOULD BE MADE.

URGES RENAMING OF STREAM

"Colorado" Stands for Everything to Its Citizens, and Would Mean More Than "Grand" to World at Large—Source of Present Colorado River.

Special to The Gazette.

DENVER, Colo., Jan. 19.—Among the bills presented to the Sixteenth general assembly is one introduced by Senator Taylor of Glenwood, to change the name of the Grand river to "Colorado."

Some doubt has been raised regarding the effect which the geographical world in general of any such action. So few of the natural streams of the west have received their names through legislative enactment that a legislative bill to perpetuate any such nomenclature or to order the world to change its manner of thinking of the streams is something untried.

Sends Letter to Constituents.

In a letter to his constituents, Senator Taylor states that the river was long known as the Rio Colorado of the West, but in some unknown manner lexicographers changed its name to the Grand. Many have wondered why there should be a Colorado river rushing through its magnificent canon, and yet no Colorado river above that.

In a letter to the chamber of commerce of Grand Junction Senator Taylor explains his reasons for asking the legislature to ratify the proposed change of names, as follows:

Jan. 17, 1907.

Hon. J. S. Carnahan, President, and D. W. Auberle, Secretary Chamber of Commerce, Grand Junction, Colo.

Dear Sirs—Inclosed herewith I send you a copy of Senate Bill No. 7, providing for the change of the name of the Grand river to the Colorado river.

If you deem the matter of sufficient public interest, I should be pleased to have you present the matter to your Chamber of Commerce and give the bill and this explanatory letter to the press of Grand Junction, and invite an expression of the sentiment of the citizens of Mesa county on the subject.

Idea Is Original.

As far as I know, the idea is entirely original with me; so that I do not claim there is any long felt want or public clamor for this change.

As everyone knows, the Colorado river is formed by the junction of the Grand and Green rivers, about 160 miles beyond our western border, and runs thence to the Gulf of California; and is in many respects the most picturesque and sublime river on this continent.

I do not know how or when the Grand or Green rivers got their names. But they are of comparatively recent origin; and why neither of them were given the name of the main stream I never could learn. But it was doubtless through a lack of geographical knowledge. I have read that in the old days the Grand was called the Colorado. But I have never verified that statement.

The Colorado river was discovered by some Spanish explorers in 1540. The word Colorado, as our school books say, is a Spanish word meaning "ruddy" or "colored red." The river soon thereafter took the name of the Rio Colorado, signifying the red water river, from the reddish appearance of its waters, below the red sandstone hills and iron stained bluffs through which it runs the greater part of its 1,700 miles. The river was known as the Rio Colorado of the West for nearly three centuries.

The act of congress passed February 2, 1861, creating the territory of Colorado, took the name from the river. Like the Missouri and the Mississippi rivers, the Green river fork is twice as long as the Grand, yet the Grand flows more water, and is in reality the main stream of the Colorado river.

Noblest River in State.

It is the largest and noblest river in the state, and it has a right to and should bear the name of Colorado from its source on the continental divide to the Pacific ocean, over 1,700 miles.

I feel that, as a matter of state pride, we should make this change. The river should come from the state that bears its name.

Besides, we have a Grand river—the Rio Grande—in the southern part of the state; and a Grand county and a Grand lake and a Grand canon, and grand mountains and grand [illegible] and even Grand valley; and everything in Colorado is grand, until the word "grand" has no especial significance or meaning whatever.

While the word "Colorado" stands for everything to its citizens, and means a world of possibilities to all the inhabitants of the earth and will have a far greater luster in the years to come.

From forty million of the [illegible] your prosperous and rapidly growing city, of which all Colorado is proud, has spent many years and thousands of dollars advertising Grand Junction and the Grand river valley, and you are known all over this country.

Colorado a Household Word.

But all legal rights are protected in this bill, and I cannot see where one dollar of all that investment can be lost. On the contrary, the name of Colorado is a household word throughout the civilized world, and I confidently believe that we people in the Grand river valley can, with 10 per cent of the advertising, make the Colorado valley a hundred times better known and more desirable for homes and investments than we ever can the Grand valley by all the advertising we can do during the next fifty years. Because every intelligent person knows how easy it is to advertise by the use of a well-known and popular word.

The Colorado valley, traversed by the magnificent state road, [illegible] to the state line, [illegible] with its power, magnificent [illegible] many other points of interest, known all over the globe as the [illegible] of the new shah, followed by venerables priests and mullahs, the new monarch brought up the rear. Mohammed Ali Mirza ascended the throne while the Persian officials and the diplomatic representatives formed themselves in a circular group of which the shah was the center. At his left stood the highest personages of his court, while at his right were gathered representatives of the United States, Great Britain, Russia, Germany and other powers. The whole presented a striking picture. The shah took his seat upon the throne and removed his hat. The prime minister placed on his head the jeweled crown which the late shah once threw to the ground because of its great weight. In the meantime the chief mullah began to intone slowly from the Koran. He then recited a poem by the laureate which was followed by another poetic legend.

CORONATION OF SHAH

This concluded, the procession was formed again and the shah descended from the throne. He walked in front of the foreign delegates, stopping in front of each to speak a few words of greeting. The British representative and the Russian minister representing the two countries principally interested in Persia, united in expressing the satisfaction of their respective governments on the choice of the shah's second son as the heir apparent to the throne.

As his majesty retired in the midst of his gorgeously clad retinue the imperial band played the national anthem, and the brilliant ceremony came to an end.

There are popular rejoicings tonight in the city which is gaily illuminated.

The date of the funeral of the late shah has not yet been determined.

of human bodies and the wreckage of the smoker and the baggage cars. None of the passengers in the sleepers were killed. Coroner Comley has taken charge and Prosecuting Attorney Hall will assist the coroner in making an investigation of the wreck.

The sleeping cars were not destroyed by fire as at first reported.

Official Information.

General Superintendent Houghton, of the Big Four, said his information at 10 p. m. was that between ten and fifteen persons were killed, while the list of seriously injured was not large. Indianapolis survivors and injured will reach the city at 1 p. m. He said:

"The Indianapolis sleeper," said Mr. Houghton, "was the last car of the train. No person on it was hurt.

The survivors were put aboard the next train for Indianapolis.

"It was necessary to send this train back to Schaff and over the Lake Erie Western and Chicago and Eastern Illinois to get back to the main line for Indianapolis. Some of the passengers wished to go back to Chicago and were sent there.

"We sent a wreck train from here at 5 a. m., but the train from Kankakee was there ahead of it.

"Our information is that No. 38 ran past the block at Fowler, probably because of the fog."

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 19.—General Superintendent H. F. Houghton of the Big Four system, tonight declared that reports of the wreck at Fowler are exaggerated. According to reports received by officials of the company, not over ten were killed and ten or fifteen injured. He stated that the company would conduct a rigid investigation of the cause of the wreck. It was his opinion that train No. 38 had failed to stop at Fowler, where a "red" block was out.

Mr. Houghton said that No. 38 was about five minutes late and the dispatcher at Kankakee had, he understood, placed an order at Fowler directing No. 38 to wait at the station for No. 95. This order was not delivered, as Engineer Tripp on No. 38 had failed to stop.

BEAUFORT, S. C., Jan. 20.—The most disastrous fire in the history of Beaufort occurred this evening. The loss is estimated at between $500,000 and $700,000, about one-third covered by insurance. The fire originated in the barn and stables of F. W. Schweper, on Bay street.

OFFICERS UNDERPAID

GENERAL FUNSTON COMPLAINS IN REPORT.

Bricklayers Get More Pay Than Captains; Hod Carriers More Than Second Lieutenants.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—"In San Francisco, a brick layer, a plasterer or a plumber receives more pay than a captain of twenty years' service stationed at any of the posts near that city, even considering the latter's quarters at the commutation of his grade. A hod carrier in the same city receives more pay than a second lieutenant."

This statement is made by Brigadier General Funston, commanding the department of California, in his annual report to the secretary of war. He made a strong plea for an increase of army pay; not for the officers just entering the service, but for those who have served long. He says:

"No one believes that army officers should attempt to compete in display with persons of wealth, but they should be able to live decently without being continually harassed by fear of debt."

General Funston finds himself much obstructed in improving the military posts by the high price of labor in San Francisco and vicinity.

Therefore General Funston recommends that all construction work upon the army posts be carried on by the labor of general prisoners as was done upon the barracks of Alcatraz Island.

He urges the creation of a reserve composed of men returned to civil life from the army.

THE COLORADO SPRINGS DRY GOODS CO.

beautiful and densely populated valley in the Rocky Mountain region.

I believe the entire Grand river watershed would be wonderfully benefited financially by the change; while I am confident the entire state will heartily approve the measure as a matter of state pride and sentiment, if the subject is properly placed before the people by the press of the state.

I have, without consultation with anyone, introduced this bill on my own responsibility to call the attention of the public to, and to obtain an expression of opinion on this subject. If Mesa, Garfield and Eagle counties disapprove of the measure, I shall promptly drop the matter. If they approve of the change, I shall vigorously endeavor to pass the bill; and will then memorialize the legislature of Utah to likewise change the name of that part of the river in that state; and I am confident Utah will promptly and gladly do so as an act of courtesy to Colorado.

The stream not being navigable, I assume that an act of congress is not necessary to effectuate the change. But if it is, I will also take up that matter with our congressmen.

Trusting that the importance of this subject may be deemed as a sufficient justification for the extreme length of this communication, and that I may have the honor of a reply and frank expression from your Chamber of Commerce and the press and people of Mesa county generally, I remain,

Yours Very Respectfully,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR.

People lay a lot of stress upon "doing their duty," when you consider that that is usually the easiest way.

Some women are so slow that they do not complete their Christmas presents until the latter part of January.

FIFTY PERSONS

Are to Accept New York Doctors' Free Treatment Offer

Several days ago the New York Doctors announced that they would contract to treat the first fifty persons who called on them for three months free of charge, except for a small charge to cover cost of medicines. A number have already availed themselves of this offer and are now under treatment. The New York Doctors do this because they know that every person cured is a walking advertisement to their skill.

The New York Doctors are Specialists in Chronic Diseases of Men, Women and Children, and have the best equipped office in this vicinity. They have been located here for nearly five years, are thoroughly established, enjoy a good practice and expect to remain here for an indefinite time. They are one of the standard institutions of the town and any promises that they make will surely be lived up to. Their office equipment is almost ideal in point of completeness. By this it will be understood that they have evolved past the old idea of practicing medicine armed alone with a pad of prescription blanks and a lead pencil. The people of modern times demand something more and they get it.

The New York Doctors have a machine for generating Static electricity, a current in itself which is known to be useful in treating nervous diseases and strengthening weak constitutions. This machine is the one used in making X-Ray examinations and when the current is passed through an especially devised glass vacuum electrode a strong lilac light is produced which will shine through any part of the body without burning or causing other pain. The effect is health giving, easing pain, etc., and is used in treating some skin diseases. They have other machines for applying all other currents of electricity in the treatment of catarrh and all diseases of the nose and throat such as Asthma and Bronchitis, diseases of the stomach and bowels, piles, kidney and bladder diseases, diseases peculiar to men, chronic diseases of children, such as St. Vitus Dance, enlarged tonsils, etc., and all diseases of women.

It is said that they never fail to cure a case of Rheumatism. This terrible disease which is so common and causes so much suffering is treated internally with medicines and by placing the patient in a sort of oven which is heated with dry hot air. The patient lies in an atmosphere nearly twice as hot as boiling water and the rheumatism is literally baked out of him without any suffering, suffocation, smothering, scorching or scalding.

It would take too much time and space to explain all about their nebulizer treatment, their vibratory stimulation treatment and so on, but we do want to say that you can go any day and see these instruments for yourself and be examined free of charge. They usually treat cases by the month or by a series of months and all medicines are furnished from their own laboratory. No prescriptions are written by them so that if your case is taken by the month you will be to no extra expense than the monthly fee.

Their medicines are taken from the three schools of medical practice and one specialist on the staff is an Osteopath. What with Medicine, Surgery, (in exceptional cases only) Osteopathy, electricity (in all its forms), Vibratory Stimulation, Thermo-therapy and their knowledge of disease and the application of proper treatment, they come nearer curing the so-called incurable diseases than any specialists known. Their treatments are always helpful if not strictly curative in the incurable diseases. Their free treatment offer closes next Saturday night so you have a whole week to make your plans in.

LEE ANNIVERSARY

ROOSEVELT SENDS LETTER TO CONFEDERATE SOCIETY.

EXTOLS VIRTUES OF GENERAL

WAS BORN ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO YESTERDAY.

MEMORIAL IS SUGGESTED

President Favors Establishment of Permanent Monument, by Way of Celebration, on the Centennial Anniversary.—Suggestion Well Received.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of General Robert E. Lee, was commemorated here tonight, under the auspices of the United Confederate and Southern Societies of the District of Columbia. The ballroom of the new Willard hotel was filled to overflowing. A special section was set apart for Confederate veterans, who marched to the hall escorted by Spanish war veterans.

Although unable to attend, President Roosevelt sent a letter in which he extolled the virtues of the confederacy's great general. His suggestion that the centennial anniversary be celebrated by the establishment of a permanent Lee memorial, with some great educational institution at the south, met with favor. Exercises were presided over by Hilary Herbert. The reading of the president's letter was assigned to Mrs. Ralph Walsh, president of the District of Columbia division United Daughters of the Confederacy. The letter follows:

To the Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, chairman, and others of the Committee of Arrangements for the celebration of the Hundredth anniversary of General Robert E. Lee:

Gentlemen—I regret that it is not in my power to be with you at your celebration. I join with you in honoring the life and career of that soldier and high-minded citizen whose fame is now a matter of pride to all our countrymen. Terrible though the day of the civil war was; awful though it was that a conflict should occur between brothers, it is yet a matter for gratitude on the part of all Americans that this, alone among contests of like magnitude should have left both sides as a priceless heritage the memory of the mighty men and the glorious deeds which that day brought forth. The courage and steadfastness, the lofty fealty to the right as it was given to each man to see the right whether he wore the gray or the blue, now makes the memories of the valiant feats, alike of those who served under Grant and of those who served under Lee precious to all good Americans.

Greatness of Soul.

General Lee has left us the memory not merely of his extraordinary skill as a general, his dauntless courage and his leadership in campaign and battle, but as also of that serene greatness of soul characteristic of those who most readily recognize the obligation of civic duty. Once the war was over he instantly undertook the task of healing and binding up the wounds of his countrymen in the true spirit of those who feel malice toward none and charity toward all, in that spirit which from the throes of the Civil war brought forth the real and indissoluble union of today. It was eminently fitting that this great man, this war worn veteran of a mighty struggle, who at its close, simply and quietly undertook his duty as a plain, everyday citizen, bent only upon helping his people in the paths of peace and tranquility should turn his attention toward educational work, toward bringing up in fit fashion the younger generation the sons of those who had proved their faith by their endeavor in the heroic days.

There is no need to dwell on General Lee's record as a soldier. The son of Light Horse Harry Lee of the revolution, he came naturally by his aptitude for arms and command. His campaign put him in the foremost ranks of the great captains of all time. But his signal valor and address in war are no more remarkable than the spirit in which he turned to the work of peace once the war was over. The circumstances were such that most men, even of his high character, felt bitterly and vindictive or oppressive or spiritless, but General Lee's heroic temper was not warped nor his great soul cast down. He stood that hard strain of bearing himself well through the gray evening of failure and therefore out of what seemed failure he helped to build the wonderful and mighty triumph of our national life in which all his countrymen share. Immediately after the close of hostilities he announced with a clear-sightedness what at that time few of any section possessed, that the interests of the southern states were the same as those of the United States, that the prosperity of the south would rise or fall with the welfare of the whole country and that the duty of the citizens appeared too plain to admit of doubt.

Obliterate Effects of War.

He urged that all should unite in honest effort to obliterate the effects of war and restore the blessings of peace.

To everyone who applied to him this was the advice he gave. Although absolutely without means he refused all offers of provisionary aid and all positions of emolument, although many were offered him. He declined to go abroad, saying that he sought only "a place to earn honest bread while engaged in some useful work."

This statement brought him the offer of the presidency of Washington college, a little institution in Lexington, Va., which had grown out of a modest foundation known as "Liberty Hall academy." Washington had endowed this academy with 100 shares of stock that had been given to him by the state of Virginia, which he had accepted only on condition that he might with them endow some educational institution. To the institution which Washington helped to found in such a spirit, Lee in the same fine spirit gave his services. He accepted the position of president at a salary of $1,500 a year, in order, as he stated, that he might do some good to the youth of the south. He applied himself to his new work with the same singleness of mind which he had showed in leading the army of northern Virginia.

All the time, by word and deed, he was striving for the restoration of real peace, of real harmony, never uttering a word of bitterness or allowing a word of bitterness uttered in his presence to go unchecked. From the close of the war to his death all his great powers were devoted to two great objects: The reconciliation of his countrymen with one another, and with fitting the youth of the south for the duty of a lofty and broad-minded citizenship.

Such is the career that you gather to honor, and I hope that you will take advantage of the one hundredth anniversary of General Lee's birthday, appealing to all our people in every section of this country to commemorate his life and deeds by the establishment at some greater representative educational institution of the south of a permanent memorial that will serve the youth of the coming years as he, in the closing years of his life, served those who so sorely needed what he so freely gave. Sincerely yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The annual ceremony of presenting crosses of honor to Confederate veterans of distinguished military record took place, after letters by Senator Berry, of Arkansas, Justice David Brewer, of the United States supreme court, and Representative John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, were read.

"POOR WAGE EARNER"

GETS ENOUGH FOR WHAT HE DOES, SAYS DIVINE.

Philanthropy Should Cease, and Poor Man Taught His Duty, and Made to Help Himself.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—Rev. Dr. Roscoe Day, chancellor of Syracuse university, in an address attacked the arguments in favor of the poor and charitable and philanthropic movements which had been advanced a few moments before by J. C. Phelps Stokes and Rose Pastor Stokes, his wife.

"What is all this cry that is being made about the poor wage earner?" asked Dr. Day.

"The wage earners get enough for what they do, and a great many of them get more. I know the poor. I have been among them and have studied them. I know that they are the only support of upwards of 10,000 saloons in this city. I know that they are the chief causes of intemperance and shiftlessness and then the blame is put on the hard-hearted corporations. We should cease some of the philanthropy which we practice and help the poor to learn their duty and to make them help themselves.

"I believe there is not a greater piece of despotism that rules today than unionism. It is a hindrance itself to the advance of man."

The various addresses were given at the annual dinner of the Syracuse alumni association.

TREAT CHINAMAN BRUTALLY

Robbers Take Money from Celestial and Leave Him Bound and Gagged to Perish.

GEORGETOWN, Colo., Jan. 19.—Sometime during the night three men entered the home of Lee Hi, a Chinaman who runs a laundry in the Hope Hose building, and robbed him of $300, the savings accumulated from a number of years over the washtub, and subjected him to awful torture.

As he speaks very poor English and is very much excited over the robbery, it is difficult to get at the facts. The best that can be gleaned is that three men, one of them wearing glasses, entered his place and beat him very severely over the head and body, the injuries from which may prove fatal, and then tied him to the floor in such a position he extricated himself about 11 o'clock this morning and gave the first intimation of the robbery. The officers are at a loss, as no description of the robbers can be gotten, and it is doubtful if any arrests can be made, as nobody is suspected and no strangers have been seen around town for the past few days. Yet it is hinted that those who committed the crime must have been acquainted with the habits of the Chinaman and aware of his having the money in his possession.

The Chinaman is in a bad physical condition this morning, having suffered terribly from the cold and the beating he received. He was tied to the floor with heavy ropes, which were bound about him so tightly that they cut into his flesh. His head and body are terribly bruised. It is evident that the robbers cared little whether their victim lived or died. So determined were they to prevent the man giving an alarm that even the fact that he might die during the night did not appeal to their mercy. Lee Hi struggled all night endeavoring to free himself from his bonds. He managed to undo the knot in the rope that held his hands together this morning and the rest was easy.

DIES IN ABJECT POVERTY

Sister of Mrs. Mizner Too Proud to Ask Wealthy Relatives for Help. Separated by Marriage.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—While Mrs. Charles T. Yerkes-Mizner, in her mansion on Fifth avenue, was not even aware that her sister was desperately ill in a little four-room flat on the opposite side of the park, Mrs. Emma A. Dolan died today from acute pneumonia, too proud even in her hour of death to call on her wealthy sister for aid.

Mrs. Dolan was Mrs. Yerkes-Mizner's youngest sister, and there was almost 15 years difference in their ages.

It was not this disparity in age which drove them apart, however, but a decided difference of opinion with respect to the circumstances of Mrs. Yerkes' divorce and marriage to Mrs. Dolan's sister.

As Mrs. Yerkes-Mizner became more and more prosperous, fortune continued to frown on the younger sister. Mrs. Dolan married a commercial traveler who is somewhere in the west.

The portion of her father's estate which she shared with her brothers and sisters was lost in speculation, and with two little children to support and her husband away, Mrs. Dolan found it difficult to support life.

She had been earning a small salary as proofreader until she became ill two weeks ago. With a sister of her husband, Miss Gertrude Lubey, Mrs. Dolan had been living in New York for about a year in straightened circumstances.

They first occupied a small flat in West Ninety-eighth street, and a short time ago moved to a rear apartment in 12 West One Hundred and Fourth street, where Mrs. Dolan died.

Neither Mrs. Yerkes-Mizner nor any member of Mrs. Dolan's family was with her when the end came, except her two little children. Her sister arrived from Philadelphia last night, but no word had been received from Mrs. Yerkes-Mizner, although A. G. Cattell, an undertaker, notified her of her sister's death, under instructions from Miss Lubey.

Mrs. Dolan was 35 years old. The body will be taken to Philadelphia for interment beside her mother and father tomorrow.

BY FRIENDLY CO-OPERATION

Immigration of Japanese Laborers Problem for Diplomats—President Jordan Explains.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 19.—In a signed statement issued today, President David Starr Jordan of Stanford university replied to the attack made upon him yesterday by members of the local board of education for his remarks on the Japanese school question. President Jordan, speaking at a banquet in this city, declared that the affairs with Japan would be settled in a gentlemanly way and by gentlemen rather than from within "the shadow of the state prison," and for that utterance he was sharply criticised by the local school directors. Here is Dr. Jordan's latest statement:

"In the language to which the school board takes exception I did not refer to the school board. The members of the board are hardly factors in the national policy of the United States. The school incident is a minor matter, except that it involves the settlement of certain questions as to the conflict of laws, national obligations and states rights. These matters are for the courts to settle. The only sensational point is that the immigration of Japanese laborers, which most of us deprecate, can be honorably and legally checked in but one way—that of friendly co-operation with the government of Japan."

From Chicken-Pox to Cholera

Cure-Alls No Longer Tolerated.

In early days every barber shop was an operating room and the town physician resorted to bleeding as the sure cure for all ailments from chicken-pox to cholera. As a result, many, including our first president, died prematurely.

The present low rate of mortality is due, in large measure, to the advances made in medical science and the knowledge of the specific treatment needed for each disease known.

There is no disease more common among American and English people than dyspepsia. So prevalent has it become that thousands suffer with it half unconsciously, consider the symptoms as natural to their physical constitution and resign themselves to living on in that condition.

There is a remedy for dyspepsia, and only one, recommended and indorsed generally by physicians: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have stood the test of years of use by millions of sufferers, have been subjected to governmental analyses in Europe and America and alone have been found to contain the elements which Nature has put into the stomach for digestion pepsin, diastase and other ferments.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets relieve the stomach and bowels in a perfectly natural way by helping them to do their work. If the stomach is weak in gastric juice, Stuart's Tablets make up the deficiency. If the muscles are inactive, Stuart's Tablets invigorate them. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets digest every form of food entering the stomach, one grain of the active principle of these Tablets being capable of digesting 3,000 grains of meat, eggs and other foods. They are not cathartic pills—their action is simply that of a digestive.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure nothing but dyspepsia, waterbrash, sour stomach and kindred ailments resulting from the imperfect digestion of food, but these diseases they positively cure.

We will gladly send you a trial package to prove the truth of our claims. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be gotten of all druggists at 50 cents. F. A. Stuart Co., 60 Stuart building, Marshall, Mich.

NEW PLANTS AND SEEDS

SHIPMENTS FROM CHINA AND MANCHURIA.

Representatives of the Department of Agriculture Exploring Foreign Lands for New Crops.

Special Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—One of the important branches of the work of the department of agriculture is that of exploring foreign lands for new crops. At present this part of the service is not as large as the department would like, but it is hoped congress will make provision for an extension at this session. During the past year a trained man has been in the cultivated fields and wild mountains of North China and Manchuria, searching for new plants and seeds worthy to be transplanted to this country, and for wild forms of our cultivated fruits and vegetables which may have characters of hardiness or unusual vigor which will make them useful for plant breeders of the United States.

Shipments of scions and of seeds representing hundreds of interesting things have been sent by him and are now undergoing trials at the gardens of the department here. Among those secured are new hardy Pekin persimmons, interesting varieties of English walnuts, the Chinese pistache, wild and cultivated apricots, the wild peach from its supposed original home, hardy apples and edible fruited hawthorns, millets and field beans, a lawn sedge, and a very remarkable lot of Chinese varieties of grapes, as well as a collection of ornamental trees and shrubs, suited to the climate of the eastern and middle states.

What is believed to be a discovery that will be an epoch in the agriculture of the northwestern prairie regions of this country, has been made by the department's explorer, Prof. N. E. Hansen, of the South Dakota agricultural experiment station, of a Siberian alfalfa, an excellent forage plant with yellow instead of the usual blue flowers. This plant is native of the dry steppes of Siberia, where the mercury sometimes freezes without snow. It is said the plant can withstand a temperature of about forty degrees below zero, with no protection. Dr. Hansen is making a study of the plant with a view to its cultivation in this country, and has sent the department quantities of the seed which will be given a thorough trial at an early date. It will supplement durum wheat in a rotative system and avoid the necessity of summer-fallowing. Arabian alfalfa is being grown in California and the southwestern states, but on account of its lack of hardiness is unsuited to the colder parts of the country. A species of vetch called the Tanghan pea, has proved superior to all others in California in its luxuriance of growth, having yielded as high as nine tons of green food per acre. On account of its great amount of herbage it effectually smokes out weeds. A large quantity of this seed is being selected and tested, with a view to its introduction next season.

The Angora goat industry has developed remarkably during the last five years, it being estimated that there are in this country about one million Angoras, distributed in all the states and territories. The largest flocks are in Texas, but the northwest has also successful flocks, and no part of the country is unfitted for them. Angoras endure extremes of heat and cold, and thrive on all kinds of soil except wet land. They prefer rocky land covered with brush. The densely covered rough lands of the south, the worn-out farms of New England, and the "stumpage" districts of Michigan and Wisconsin are especially adapted to them. Their habit of browsing makes them valuable for clearing land of brush. Their chief value is in their long, silky fleece, known as mohair, which is largely used in the making of plush, imitation astrakan and mohair dress goods, or brilliantines. The goats are much less subject to disease than sheep.

Second-Hand PIANOS

It is often better to buy a second-hand piano of a standard make than to buy a cheap piano, new.

You may buy a second-hand piano now, and later on turn it in on a new high-grade instrument for just what you have paid.

It is not often that an array of second-hand pianos can be shown to equal this.

UPRIGHT, renowned make, resonant tone, case almost like new.....$140

WILLARD, walnut case; action, case and tone good; a piano that will give many years of service and will add greatly to the attractiveness of your parlor.....$160

FRANKLIN, mahogany case, small alcove style, used a few years, out in excellent tone, and case in good repair.....$185

KIMBALL, an excellent little piano, walnut case, just the piano for a small parlor; a splendid bargain.....$175

WHITNEY PIANOS, oak cases, pianos which have been rented, but have had exceptionally good care, from $195 to $235

To fully appreciate these bargains you should compare these prices with a conservative price on the instruments when new. New, these pianos would have sold for $300.00 to $400.00, and yet for music, entertainment and culture they are as good as ever.

We have two Special Bargains in

Grand Pianos

It is unusual that Grand pianos are placed on the market second-hand until they are beyond usefulness. The two pianos named below are brilliant examples of SPLENDID GRAND PIANOS, second-hand.

WEBER GRAND, used only eight years, case perfect, tone good as in new piano, action responsive and not worn—$400.00.

STEINWAY GRAND. This piano has graced one of the finest parlors in Colorado Springs for some years, and is now put on sale as an excellent bargain at $600.00.

DEMOCRATIC CLUB TO APFEAL

Will Go to Supreme Court, Says Kinsley, If New Trial Is Denied Here.

The Democratic club will file a bill of exceptions in the state supreme court, should Judge Robert Kerr of the local county court refuse a new trial in the case of the city vs. Bartender Charles Crippen, which was Friday decided in the county court in favor of the city.

Attorney S. H. Kinsley, representing the Democratic club, yesterday said that a motion for a new trial would be filed some time within the ten days allowed by the court, and that, failing in the motion, the case will be carried to the supreme court. "The Democratic club doesn't care a —— for the county court decision, and you may quote me as so saying," said Attorney Kinsley.

DRY FARMING EXPERIMENTS

General Palmer Will Make Extensive Tests Along This Line.

Experimenting along the line suggested by the dry farming experts of the state agricultural college and meditated by Gen. William J. Palmer, who has large tracts of land in this county suitable for farming under this process. The experiments will be for the purpose of determining the results which may be expected from the cultivation of the soil according to the methods advocated and the most profitable crops for the semiarid lands. Experiments will also be carried out along the line of seed culture as suggested by Prof. W. H. Olin of the State Agricultural college and others who are making a study of that subject.

CASE NEARING AN END

STRATTON TAX SQUABBLE TO BE SETTLED SOON.

Only Point Now in Dispute Is Amount of Interest Due State on Principal.

The inheritance tax claim of the state against the Stratton estate will be settled within 30 or 90 days, according to present negotiations, and the controversy regarding the principal of the tax has practically been amicably adjusted. The expiration of the time mentioned will probably see the adjustment [illegible] of the exact amount in interest on the tax to be paid into the state treasury.

Their present plan, to which both the attorneys for the state and for the estate have tentatively agreed, is that the Stratton executors shall pay as principal tax on the residium of the estate, the sum of $269,928.65, which was formally offered by the executors to the county treasurer of El Paso county last October, and refused by him. In addition, the sum of $13,335.65, principal tax on the $435,000 in unpaid legacies, will be paid to the state. This makes a total of $283,264.33. I. Harry Stratton has already paid to the state over $500 as inheritance tax on the $850,000 received by him. The only amount which will then be in dispute is the interest on the principal.

The state of Colorado claims interest at the statutory rate of 6 per cent, from the date of the death of W. S. Stratton, September 14, 1902. This aggregates approximately $78,000. The state bases its claim on the statutes, which provide that all inheritance taxes unpaid within a year from the death of the testator, shall draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent. The executirs claim that they could not pay the tax until the amount due the state was determined by the court, this determination having been made July 26, 1906. They tendered the amount then appraised by the court, on October 8, 1905, and claim that they owe interest only between the date of the determination of the tax by the probate court, and the date of tender, which would make the interest only about $3,000. It is this discrepancy which the supreme court will be asked to determine, and, the principal being paid and only the interest remaining in doubt, the matter will speedily be adjusted.

The executors are perfectly willing to pay the state whatever is decided on by the supreme court as just, but do not wish to pay any amount which might later be adjudged illegal, and thus shoulder the personal responsibility of the payment. Should the supreme court agree to take original jurisdiction in the matter, which course several of the justices have intimated they will follow, the matter can be settled at once. The agreement of both sides on the principal to be paid, and the adjudication by the court of the interest controversy, will settle the entire tax matter.

The executors will shortly file the petition to the probate court, requesting permission to pay $435,000 in legacies, as provided in the will of Mr. Stratton. The four remaining lawsuits, all of which are regarded as extremely unlikely of materialization in the supreme court, will then be the only bar to an immediate closing of the estate, and its transfer to the trustees of the Myron Stratton home for the poor. The pending litigation, it is thought, will not interfere with the transfer of the assets of the estate from the executors to the trustees, since provisional arrangement can be made, in case any of the litigants against the estate are successful.

Nature's Way Is Best.

The function strengthening and tissue building plan of treating chronic, lingering and obstinate cases of disease as pursued by Dr. Pierce, is following after Nature's plan of restoring health.

He uses natural remedies, that is extracts from native medicinal roots, prepared by processes wrought out by the expenditure of much time and money, without the use of alcohol, and by skillful combination in just the right proportions.

Used as ingredients of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, Black Cherry bark, Queen's root, Golden Seal root, Bloodroot and Stone root, specially exert their influence in cases of lung, bronchial and throat troubles, and this "Discovery" is, therefore, a sovereign remedy for bronchitis, laryngitis, chronic coughs, catarrh and kindred ailments.

The above native roots also have the strongest possible endorsement from the leading medical writers of all the several schools of practice, for the cure not only of the diseases named above but also for indigestion, torpor of liver, or biliousness, obstinate constipation, kidney and bladder troubles and catarrh, no matter where located.

You don't have to take Dr. Pierce's say so alone as to this; what he claims for his "Discovery" is backed up by the writings of the most eminent men in the medical profession. A request by postal card or letter, addressed to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., for a little book of extracts from eminent medical authorities endorsing the ingredients of his medicines, will bring a little book free that is worthy of your attention if needing a good, safe, reliable remedy of known composition for the cure of almost any old chronic, or lingering malady.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic.

The most valuable book for both men and women is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. A splendid 1008-page volume, with engravings and colored plates. A copy, paper-covered, will be sent to anyone sending 21 cents in one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. Cloth-bound, 31 cents.

PROF. READ TO BEGIN WORK

Will Assume Duties This Month as Professor of Mining and Metallurgy at Colorado College.

Dr. Thomas T. Read, the new professor of mining and metallurgy, will begin work in the engineering school of Colorado college this month. He comes from Columbia university, where he took two degrees. In 1905 he received there the degree of engineer of mines after pursuing courses in civil engineering with some additional work in geology. During 1905-6 he was instructor in mining and metallurgy in the University of Wyoming, and the following year assistant professor of mining and metallurgy in the same institution. During this period he was also engaged at times in consulting work for various commercial companies. In 1901 he was appointed fellow in mining at Columbia university, resigning from the professorship at the University of Wyoming to go there in June to September, 1901, with the North American Copper company of Montana, Wyo. From 1901 to 1903 he was at Columbia university engaged in research work in mining, metallurgy and geology as candidate for the degree of doctor of philosophy. He at the same time acted as assistant in mineralogy. He received the degree of doctor of philosophy in June, 1906, and since then has been connected with the Arford Copper company in Camden, N. J.

Dr. Read has been very active in research work during the last three years. A dozen or more articles from his pen have appeared in leading technical journals like the Engineering and Mining Journal, Mining Reporter, Iron and Steel Magazine, the Transactions of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, the American Journal of Science, the Journal of Geology and the American Geologist.

ENGINEERING PUBLICATION OUT

Is First of Series to Be Issued by Engineering School of Colorado College.

The school of engineering of Colorado college has just brought out the first issue of an engineering series of the Colorado college publications. It is the intention of the school to publish one of two of such engineering numbers every year, containing research work carried on by the faculty and students. The pamphlet just issued contains two of the six theses submitted to the faculty in June, 1906, by members of the graduating class in the school of engineering.

The first paper, "The Fusibility and Fluidity of Titaniferous Silicates," is of interest to metallurgists. It was prepared conjointly by Loring C. Lennox and Charles N. Cox. Mr. Lennox is a young man well known in this city, the son of William Lennox, a trustee of Colorado college. Mr. Cox is from Denver, and at the present time, holds a good position at Breckenridge, Colo. The thesis is the result of much experimental work carried on in the assay laboratory at Palmer hall. It discusses the question of iron ores containing titanic acid, against which there is a widespread prejudice among [illegible] the supposed tendency of this ore to form accretions in the hearth. The conclusion reached in the paper is that titanic acid in moderate quantity [illegible] if properly handled in blast furnaces, will give less trouble than heretofore supposed.

The second article, on a "Design of a Low-Tension Switchboard," is the thesis of Vernon T. Brigham, who is now assistant in the department of electrical engineering at Purdue university. The advantages claimed for the new design of switchboard are: Simplicity in making and breaking of circuit, protection from possible short circuits on the board, and the possibility of making as many parallel power connections as desired. The switchboard was made by Mr. Brigham in the engineering shops of the college and stands now in the electrical laboratory in Palmer hall.

M'CLURG LECTURES POPULAR

Are Now Making Successful Tour of Middle States.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert McClurg of this city, after a successful tour of the south, are lecturing in Ohio and the middle states on "Panoramic Colorado." Large audiences are attracted at each of the lectures, according to newspaper accounts of the trip.

In Dayton, O., Mr. and Mrs. McClurg lectured both afternoon and evening last Tuesday, the audiences aggregating 1,000 people on the two occasions. The addresses of both, together with the stereopticon views, were well received, states a Dayton paper, which gives a brief resume of the history of Cliff Dwellers, as portrayed by the McClurgs.

PETE GUY PLEADS GUILTY

Will Be Sentenced Next Tuesday for Highway Robbery.

Pete Guy, colored, yesterday pleaded guilty to a charge of robbery, in the district court. He will be sentenced next Tuesday, at which time William Taylor, also colored, his alleged accomplice in the deal, will have a hearing. Taylor, it is said, will also plead guilty.

The crime for which the men were arrested was the holding up of W. W. Warner, a Roswell grocer, more than a month ago. Although both men were implicated in the robbery, Guy was the one who held up Warner at the point of a revolver. The men secured $35 in cash and approximately $100 in checks.

MAY DECLARE STRIKE

COAL MINERS TO HOLD MASS MEETING TODAY.

Operators Decline to Yield to Demands of Union—Frank Garnier Talks.

The attempts of the local representatives of the United Mine Workers to bring about an adjustment of the differences existing between the union coal miners and the mine operators in El Paso county have failed and today the union miners will hold a mass meeting at Pueblo to consider further action.

The mine operators have refused to recognize the officials of the United Mine Workers and declare they have received no demands from their employes. The same demand made by the union coal miners was made through the United Mine Workers organization, and it is said that the mass meeting today will be productive of either a demand from the local unions as unions or a declaration to quit work.

Vice President Frank Garnier, who has temporary charge of the local district office of the United Mine Workers of America, has interviewed several operators during the last week in an effort to reach a satisfactory agreement. The operators have replied that as far as they know their men are satisfied with the present state of affairs, that they have received no demands from them and that the operators have nothing to concede.

"I regret very much that the operators have not seen fit to come to some satisfactory terms with the union men," said Mr. Garnier yesterday. I was courteously received by the operators, but interviews were barren of results toward settling the existing differences. I do not know what action will be taken at the meeting tomorrow. At the meeting last Thursday I requested the men to defer action until I familiarized myself with conditions here and talked with the operators in an attempt to arrive at a satisfactory agreement.

"One of the principal grievances of the miners is the nonrecognition of the union by the operators. The mines are run on the 'open shop' principle, but union miners have been discriminated against and even discharged because they were union men. That condition does not prevail at present at mines north of the city, but the miners want some assurance from the operators that they will not again prevail when work slackens.

"If the mines in El Paso county were employing none but union men, I believe that it would greatly benefit everybody in the community. It would bring in a more competent class of miners, the operators would profit by increased production, better pay would mean more money spent among the merchants of the city and as a result the entire community would be benefited.

"As an example of the increased production it would bring, take the northern coal fields of Colorado, where union miners are employed. One-fourteenth of the miners in this state are employed in the northern fields. Working three-fifths of the time, they produce one-eighth of the entire coal production of Colorado. The ratio of production is nearly two tons by every union miner against one ton for every nonunion miner. The mining of coal in the northern fields is much more difficult than it is in the southern fields, where nonunion men are employed. The ratio of fatal accidents in coal mines is three to one in favor of the union miners. In the northern fields there is one life lost for every 800,000 tons mined and in the southern fields one man is killed for every 100,000 tons mined.

"They can operate their mines here with nonunion men, but there production is greatly lessened by doing so. One mine in this vicinity which was producing between 500 and 600 daily, three years ago with union labor is now barely able to produce 200 tons a day with its present class of workmen."

athletics. An order has been issued for all students desiring to try out for places on the Tiger nine to report at Washburn field on the afternoon of Monday, January 28. A number of last year's men are back in school and have signified their intention of playing baseball again this spring. New white suits have been ordered for the members of the baseball team. On the breast of the sweaters will be the word "Colorado" in big black letters. The stockings will be black and gold in color. The first game of the season will probably be with the High school nine.

Captain Ivory James has a number of promising track men who will begin work in a few weeks. The cross-country runs will begin soon, and regular daily training will commence about February 15. PLAY FOR MIDSUMMER CUP

Golfers Pull Off First Round at the Country Club—Juniors Postpone Match.

Despite the high wind which made playing extremely difficult, the first round in the play for the midsummer golf cup, offered by J. A. Hayes, H. S. Lunt, C. P. Dodge and Charles MacNeill, was held on the links at the Cheyenne Mountain Country club yesterday afternoon. On account of the wind, the playing was not quite as good as usual. The course was for 18 holes. Next Saturday, the winners of yesterday's game will be paired against each other, and in like manner, the match will be continued until the last pair has contested.

The match for the Junior cup on the Town and Gown links, which was scheduled for yesterday, was postponed until some day this week, on account of the cold weather and high wind.

The results of yesterday's play follow:

C. P. Dodge beat C. Carpenter.
Ferriday beat Von Gonzenback.
Connell beat Chisholm.
D. Carpenter beat Cowan.
Scott beat Douglas.
Hagar won from Harrison by default.
O'Brien won from E. Carpenter by default.
A. Carpenter won from Brabazon by default.
Allen and Randol tied.

Those who will take part in the next drawings are C. P. Dodge, Ferriday, Connell, D. Carpenter, Scott, Hagar, O'Brien, A. Carpenter, Allen and Randol.

Interest in bowling in Colorado Springs is reviving and plans are being made for a number of other matches. TO RECOVER GOLD ORE

Suit Filed by Nevada Mining Company Against Denver Assayer.

DENVER, Jan. 19.—A replevin suit was filed in the district court this afternoon by W. P. Milburn, as attorney for the Goldfield-Mohawk Mining company of Nevada. The suit is brought against E. C. Burlingame, a local assayer. It is to recover 600 pounds of gold ore valued at $10,000, which the plaintiff alleges was stolen from the Mohawk and shipped to Fred Colver, in Denver, and by him turned over to Burlingame for reduction. It is claimed the ore was shipped in five wooden boxes. This is said to be only part of a large quantity of high-grade ore which it is alleged was stolen from the mine.

BOLSINGER MAKES HIS ESCAPE

PUEBLO, Col., Jan. 19.—Former State Senator Henry C. Bolsinger, of Central City, president of the Gilpin county chamber of commerce, and a prominent mining man, who has been confined at the State Insane Asylum for several months, escaped from that institution Thursday night and is still at large. It is feared he wandered off toward the mountains and, in his irresponsible condition became lost and perished. A search for him is about to be instituted throughout the state.

Bolsinger made his escape by lowering himself through a "dum waiter passage."

Is It Bronchitis or Consumption?

Today we made an examination for a patient who was sent to California for Bronchitis by his physician in the east. Not improving in California he had another examination made and the diagnosis of Bronchitis was partially confirmed, and he was advised to come to Colorado. As we have said before in these write ups, no doctor in the east will advise a change of climate simply for Bronchitis, and when they do it is fair to them for the patient to suppose that there is more the matter with them than simply Bronchitis! In other words that it is consumption. Doctors are afraid if they tell a patient that they have consumption they will lose all hope and give up and consequently grow worse. This is perhaps true when they have nothing to offer consumptives but forced feeding and a change of climate. There are very few conditions of the lungs that would induce a doctor to recommend a change of climate except tuberculosis, or a suspicion on the part of the doctor that the patient had tuberculosis. Therefore, when a patient comes to us declaring that they have Bronchitis only, we examine the lungs very carefully and rarely ever fail to find tuberculosis in some form, and the examination of the sputum confirms our diagnosis. We tell our patients just what is the matter with them, for we want them to know their true condition so that they can do everything they can to aid us in bringing about a cure, for usually when they are sent here for Bronchitis the tubercular disease has not advanced very far, and such cases are usually quite easily cured.

We examined another case today who is plainly in the first stage of consumption and can be cured at home without any risk whatever if they follow out treatment, for this treatment is a cure for every case of consumption in the first stage, and for a good many cases in the second stage. A great many patients are not financially able to pay for the treatment in addition to the living expenses here. A great many cases of this sort can be cured at home and thus save the expense of living in the climate, so that this treatment has an advantage in this respect. People can get well at home if the lungs are not too badly diseased and thus save the expense of living here away from home. In other words, they could bear the expense of the treatment, but can not bear the expense of the treatment and living away from home. Another thing is true. Patients come here who do not improve in the climate, largely because their hearts are weak, or from some other reason they do not bear the high altitude. Cases of this sort can take the treatment into a low altitude and get well while they would not get well here. It is also true that there are those who would do well on a diet that they can get at home, but do not do well on the diet that they get away from home. These and other considerations make it very important indeed for patients who are not perfectly satisfied with their improvement in this climate to investigate our methods. This can be satisfactorily done at our offices in the Barnes Bldg., where examinations and consultations are free. Office hours are from 10 to 12 a. m. and from 2 to 4 p. m. Sundays excepted.

SENTIMENT IS DIVIDED

PROPERTY OWNERS NOT UNANIMOUS ON SANTA FE PLANS.

Committee Is Appointed to Confer With Attorney of Railroad on Matter.

A meeting of a number of East Pike's Peak avenue property owners was held in Redmen hall last night to discuss the Santa Fe railroad proposition. It was thought that owners of property on East Huerfano street would attend, but none were present. After considerable discussion of the various phases of the subject, it was decided that Chairman Van D. Reniick and the secretary of the meeting confer with the attorneys for the railroad, to learn what it is going to do.

This committee is comprised of Otis Reniick, E. R. Stark, William Ogg, C. S. Thompson and Lynn Atkinson. The members have no power to act for the property owners, nor are they required to report to them, but it was the general sense of the meeting that the matter be put into crystallized form through a conference of the committee and the railroad attorneys.

There were about 20 property owners and residents present last night. Sentiment was divided regarding a subway under Huerfano street, and there were about as many in favor of the project as there were in favor of the proposed viaduct. Some were so opposed to the subway that they declared the vacation of Pike's Peak avenue preferable to the grading of Huerfano and the construction of a subway thereon.

The reported plan of the Santa Fe to build a passenger depot south of the present station and to change the latter into a freight depot, was discussed at length. Owing to the lack of definite information, the matter was left to the committee, together with the other propositions in connection with the affair.

Mrs. Price's Song "Colorado" Enthuses Club Women.

"Colorado," the song written by Mrs. Maude McFerran Price, of this city, was sung before an audience of 400 ladies by Julian Worthington, also of Colorado Springs, at a meeting of the art and literature department of the Denver Woman's club yesterday afternoon.

The song evoked enthusiastic applause, and all present were made converts to its cause as a state song after its rendition by Mr. Worthington, according to advices from Denver. The Denver club woman are in favor of "Colorado" being made a state song, and prospects seem bright for its adoption by the legislature.

DISAPPROVES REPORT

KERR CRITICISES REPORT OF STRATTON EXECUTORS.

No Information Is Given As to Receipts and Expenditures of the Subordinate Companies.

Characterizing as insufficient and incomplete the annual report of the executors of the Stratton estate, which was filed in the probate court January 11, Judge Robert Kerr yesterday marked the document "not approved." The court's notation on the report is as follows:

"The report is not approved for the reason that it is insufficient and incomplete in that it does not show the receipts and expenditures of properties held by three corporations, under the control of the executors, to-wit: The International Realty company, the Interurban Railway company and the Deep Mining and Development company. This report gives the court no information concerning the receipts and expenditures, management or condition of these corporations. The court does not now pass on the report in other respects.

ROBERT KERR, Judge."

The court last year disapproved the report of the Stratton executors for practically the same reasons, although no revision was made by the executors as a result.

The last report showed receipts for the year of $495,140.85, with expenditures of $342,197.41, leaving a cash balance of $153,943.44. The statement showed the dividends and profits paid into the estate's treasury by the three above-named corporations, but, as stated in Judge Kerr's notation, failed to show any of the workings of the corporations themselves. No statement was made of the expenditures and receipts of the respective corporations, except insofar as they related directly to the estate.

The International Realty company owns all the Denver and local property of the estate, the Colorado Springs Interurban Railway company controls the local street railway and the Stratton-Cripple Creek Mining and Development company holds title to the valuable Cripple Creek mining acreage belonging to the late W. S. Stratton.

The Realty company shares, according to the executors, are worth $1,380,000; the bonds and stock of the railway company are valued at $1,399,980 and the mining company shares are worth $1,275,000. In addition, the Portland Gold Mining company stock is worth $706,066.20, and the Brown Palace hotel mortgage amounts to $623,333.32. This, with the cash balance of $153,943.44, makes a total of $5,538,322.96, comprising the bulk of the vast estate.

GRATIFYING PROGRESS MADE

Agreed Statement of Fact Drafted in City-Hydro Controversy.

Mayor H. C. Hall and Attorneys W. C. Robinson and Karl C. Schuyler, representing the city and the Pike's Peak Hydro-Electric company, respectively, spent the entire day yesterday in consultation regarding the Hydro controversy. Gratifying progress was made and negotiations are much further advanced than at any previous time, according to one of the conferees, although no definite decision was reached which will serve to crystalize matters into any exact form.

An agreed statement of facts was redrafted and will probably meet with the approval of both sides, although the Hydro company, as well as the city council, must approve all proceedings before the matter is finally left in the hands of arbitrators.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Costs Nothing to Try.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

THE STORY IN A NUT SHELL.

An order placed with the mills for 500 yards highly mercerized waistings. A quality that usually sells at from 40c to 50c per yard. Specially bought for our mill remnant sale, and instead of getting 500 yards we received 5,000 yards—a mistake in the shipping department of the mills. This large quantity was intended for one of the largest department stores in Chicago. The mistake was not discovered until the goods reached us. NEWS OF THE LOCAL COURTS

The mandamus proceedings instituted by H. H. Stevens to compel City Building Inspector G. M. Young to show cause why he should not issue a permit to Stevens to construct an armory on his property on West Bijou street, was yesterday continued in the district court until 2 o'clock next Saturday afternoon. The pressure of prior business in the court caused the postponement.

The appeal of George Birdsall, chief of the Colorado City police department, from a recent county court decision, was filed in the district court yesterday. The case, which involves $177 in fees received from the impounding of animals in Colorado City during the last year, was decided this week in the county court in favor of the city of Colorado Springs, plaintiff in the suit against Birdsall.

In the case of Campbell vs. Hitchcock, et al., in the district court yesterday, the defendant filed a demurrer to the supplemental complaint of the plaintiff, alleging it to contain a misjoinder of causes of action as regards the defendants, and also that it does not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Notices were filed in the district court yesterday by the respective defendants in the cases of Hitchcock vs. Campbell, the Colorado Springs company vs. Zobrist, et al., and the Colorado Springs company vs. Fehringer, et al., that previously-filed motions will be called for hearing in court tomorrow morning. The same notice was filed by the plaintiff in the case of the John Denman Horse company vs. the Rock Island railroad.

Alfonso Panello yesterday filed suit in the district court against Henry Lombard, to regain possession of property in the eastern part of El Paso county, alleged to be owned by the plaintiff and occupied by defendant.

Justice Ruby yesterday bound over Robert Burns to the district court, on a charge of stealing cash from the safe of E. R. Wooster, a second-hand dealer.

N. B. Hames, a Colorado City saloonkeeper, was yesterday fined $50 and costs in the district court for assault and battery. Hames, who is alleged to have drawn a knife on H. B. Clark, a Denver detective, was at first charged with assault to kill. This was withdrawn and the defendant pleaded guilty to a charge of assault and battery.

Ten years in the Golden Reform school is the penalty which Harold Moore, the 11-year-old son of Mrs. M. A. Woodruff, of Arcadia, will undergo for stealing 25 cents from his stepfather. Moore was yesterday sentenced in the juvenile court to remain in the reform school until his majority.

John Doyle, who stubbornly resisted arrest at the hands of Policeman John Patton, Friday, was yesterday fined $30 and costs in police court, for drunkenness and resisting an officer.

Oliver Brooks, colored, who was arrested by Humane Agent J. F. Neff, Friday, on a charge of cruelty to animals, was yesterday sentenced by Judge Ruby to serve 30 days in the county jail and to pay a fine of $10 and costs.

Some people who never recognize a rebuff, notice the slightest hint that can be construed as an invitation.

When the cat is away the night is quiet.

"Fresh Roasted Coffee? bah! Mother didn't use fresh roasted coffee, she had Arbuckles."

The way to get a good cup of coffee that tastes like Coffee with all the delicious flavor and aroma intact, is to buy a package of the old original Arbuckles' ARIOSA Coffee, and grind it as you want to use it, first warming it a little to develop the flavor and make the grinding easy. Coffee loses its identity as Coffee after being ground or exposed to the air and is easily contaminated by handling.

Arbuckles' was the first roasted packaged coffee.

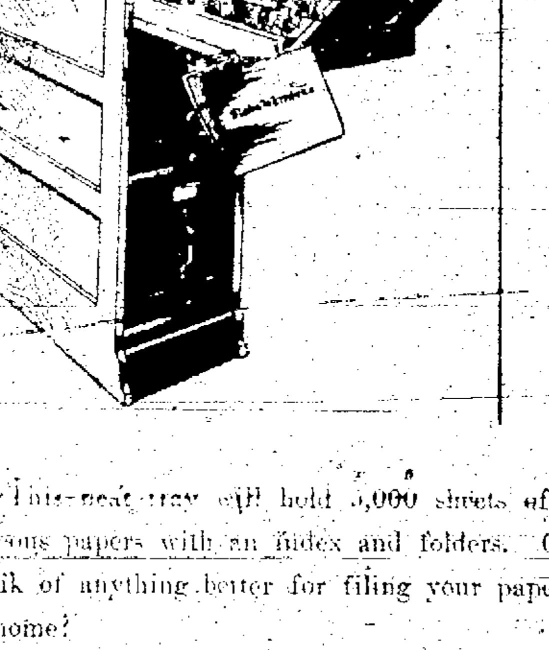

The pores of each coffee berry are sealed after roasting with fresh eggs and granulated sugar to hold the goodness in and make the coffee settle clear and quickly; an actual application by machinery, of "Mother's" methods as patented by this firm.

Sold only in packages ... full weight. Sales for 37 years ... coffees. The best ... for you to ... Same old firm ...

POULTRY SHOW CLOSES

MOST SUCCESSFUL IN HISTORY OF ASSOCIATION.

Many Exhibits Will Go to Pueblo Show—Large Number of Pigeons Pleasing Feature of Last Day.

The tenth annual exhibition of the Pike's Peak Poultry association, in many respects, the best of its kind ever given in Colorado Springs, is over, even to the last crow. The show closed at 10 o'clock last night. The last week has been one of incessant cock-crow and coo, and was a great week for poultry breeders and pigeon fanciers. The birds seemed sorry last night when the last visitor had departed and coops were covered with cloth preparatory to returning them to their respective owners. For the last six days the birds have been on dress parade, strutting about in their narrow coops, and trying to attract attention from the visitors at the show. The high altitude did not seem to affect their crowing qualities in the least, and from early morning until late at night the hall rang with their canticles. Occasionally the low cooing of the pigeons could be heard as they told one another their impressions of the show.

Secretary Veditz and his assistants have deserved and received great praise for the efficiency of their work in looking after the feathered stock and attending to the hundreds of visitors at the show. Preparations are already being made for the next show which will probably be held in December. Secretary Veditz has been instructed to correspond with various judges with a view of securing a judge for the next show.

Awards were made yesterday on the Buff Leghorn, Silver Spangled Hamburgs, Rhode Island Reds, Bantams and pigeon classes. A number of the exhibits will be sent to the Pueblo show.

CAN'T HANDLE LUMBER

EQUIPMENT OF NORTHERN PACIFIC INADEQUATE.

Sawmill Owners of Northwest Tell Commission How They Were Compelled to Lose Thousands.

TACOMA, Wash., Jan. 19.—Investigations into the lumber car shortage by Interstate Commerce Commissioner Franklin K. Lane today developed facts showing the Northern Pacific equipment to be entirely inadequate to handle the lumber products of western Washington. Sawmill owners told how small mill concerns are gradually being forced into bankruptcy, how the larger concerns have sustained losses which will reach into hundreds of thousands of dollars and how thousands of mechanics have been thrown out of employment by failure of the Northern Pacific railway to furnish cars enough to enable the log wood working plants on their line to market their products.

Sawmill operators calmly detailed how through no fault of their own they have lost thousands of dollars during the past eighteen months, all because they have not been able to market their product, but they complimented the strenuous efforts of local officials of the Northern Pacific to relieve the situation and said that while the Tacoma railroad men had done all they could to aid the mills, the fault lay in mismanagement of the higher officers in the east.

Gen. James M. Ashton of Tacoma represented the lumber interests, assisted by Austin E. Griffith of Seattle. More than forty lumber manufacturers attended the hearing and all showed intense interest in the proceedings. On the side of the court room occupied by the Northern Pacific officials were James B. Kerr, assistant general counsel of the railroad, with headquarters at St. Paul; E. J. Cannon, division counsel of Tacoma; J. W. Whitworth, traffic manager of St. Paul and Third Vice-President C. M. Levy; Assistant General Superintendent S. E. Palmer, General Western Freight Agent Blakely, Superintendent W. C. Albee of the Pacific division, and a large array of minor officials and clerks.

At the request of General Ashton, on behalf of leading lumbermen owning mills in the northwestern part of the state, the investigations were continued by the commissioner, the inquiry to be resumed Tuesday at the county court rooms in Seattle.

Details of the testimony in which Commissioner Lane indicated that he was most especially interested, and concerning which he questioned witnesses closely, related to the policy alleged to be fathered by J. J. Hill of allowing cars to accumulate upon the sidetracks and then running long trains across the continent at a very slow rate of speed. The manufacturers stated that this policy has caused the car shortage to be felt much more than it would otherwise have been.

The mill men said that eighty per cent of the cars used by the Northern Pacific for the transportation of lumber traffic belong to other railroads. All of those cars have to be returned east by the same route whence they came, and unless the mill men have shipments going in that direction they have found it necessary to adopt the policy of holding the cars and paying demurrage charges until they can secure an order for shipments going to points along the line of the railroad owning the car. Certain witnesses charged discrimination as to the long and short haul upon the part of the Northern Pacific. All agreed that it now takes from 60 to 100 days for the delivery of a car from Puget sound to Minnesota transfer points, while before the Northern Pacific and other lines passed into control of Mr. Hill, shipments were delivered on an average time of three weeks.

WOULD MOVE PUEBLO ASYLUM

Superintendent Busey Suggests That Institution Be Removed to Denver.

PUEBLO, Jan. 19.—Dr. A. P. Busey, superintendent of the State insane asylum, has made a recommendation to the state board of lunacy commissioners that the insane asylum be removed to Denver. The recommendation is contained in the board's biennial report and has been submitted to the governor. Dr. Busey's reason for asking the change is that the surroundings of the asylum are noisy and inappropriate. There is much opposition here to the plan and any effort to put it through will be fought by the entire city. Dr. Busey's recommendation follows:

"The most important requirement for the next period, except maintenance, is that of proper provision for additional insane that are unprovided for. There must be at least 150 and possibly 200 insane that are deprived of state care. This institution with a capacity of 800 patients is full to overflowing and additional accommodations will have to be provided.

"The question of what the provision shall be, whether a new institution or additions to the present plant, is a question for the Sixteenth general assembly to determine. There are many reasons why a new institution would be the proper thing, the present tract of ground embraces less than eighty acres, after deducting right of way to railroad and what acreage has been destroyed by the river, the present population is 800 on this small tract of land, with no way to obtain enough additional acreage to put up new buildings. Again, on account of the noise made by the Santa Fe Railroad company switch-yards, the present location is a very noisy and undesirable one, and all acute cases of nervous trouble are greatly disturbed at night, making it an unsuitable location for this class.

"The first consideration in a matter of this kind should be the proper care, treatment and comfort of the insane. It is economy as well as humane to make proper provision for these people; in the beginning or incipiency of their disease is the time to give them appropriate surroundings and scientific treatment, and thus restore them as soon as possible. It is cheaper to a state to give them proper care and restore them than to have them become chronic and incurable for want of proper facilities and have to be supported at the expense of the state for life. It must also be remembered that these patients are good people, they all have been taxpayers and are entitled to the best provision the state is able to make for them.

"In consideration of these facts and the rapid growth of the population of the state, it seems to me a new institution might be built in the suburbs of Denver on a tract of about 80 acres of land at a point sufficiently remote from the noise of railroads and bustle of the city, yet at the same time near enough to be easy of access, so that supplies can be readily and cheaply obtained.

"The advantages of a location for an asylum in proximity to a city like Denver are very great from an economical standpoint to the taxpayer."

BEST VOICES IN AMERICA.

Jean De Reszke, the Famous Singer, Says They Excel All Others.

From the New York Sun.

When Henry W. Savage and Manager Ralph Edmunds were in Paris last summer gathering a cast for "Madam Butterfly," Jean De Reszke arranged a little "affair" at his home in order that Mr. Savage might hear some new voices. The Yankee colonel tells of it:

In the course of our conversation, I asked De Reszke: "Have you many Americans studying with you?"

"Some," he answered, "but I wish there were more."

"Why?"

"Because they are the best. The finest voices in the world come from America. The biggest, the purest, the most dramatic. I don't know why it is so. I merely know that it is so."

During his visit to the United States The Record said to me: "I can not understand the temper of your people. To me they are a paradox. Here in the United States you have greater demand for grand opera than in any other country. Here, too, you have the best supply of natural singers. Yet instead of producing your musical classics in English, with casts of native singers, you go abroad and pay enormous prices for men and women with foreign names and foreign titles. I presume that it is due to the same inexplicable national characteristic which dictates the publishing of your menu in languages which 90 per cent of the diners can not read."

SUNDAY JANUARY 20 1907

THE MUNICIPAL LEAGUE MOVEMENT.

FEW people except those who look at political affairs through spectacles hopelessly clouded by partisan prejudice will seriously question the necessity for some such movement in Colorado Springs as has just been launched under the name of the Municipal League. Until two years ago control of the city government was entirely in the hands of the Republican machine—the machine which we have with us today and which has given abundant proof of its unfitness to rule. In the last municipal campaign the power of the organization was badly crippled and though it was only a temporary reverse it was the means of giving Colorado Springs a clean and remarkably efficient administration. Now the old crowd—the Boynton-Fairley combination—is industriously making its plans for the coming campaign and it will of course put up a hard fight to recover its lost power and prestige. If it wins we will have a resumption of boss government characterized, in all probability by the same dishonesty and inefficiency that marked the old regime. Keeping these facts in mind it is plain that the time has come for an organized effort by the citizens who want Colorado Springs governed in honest business-like fashion instead of by spoilsmen.

To the average American citizen who possesses a will of his own and an independent spirit political bossism is a thing too galling and humiliating to be endured except under stress of utter helplessness. The people of Colorado Springs submitted to it for years because they thought they had to but in the spring of 1905 they found a means of partial escape. The way the nominating conventions were juggled last fall and the subsequent conduct of the [illegible] that the obliging gentlemen who have volunteered to take full charge of things political in this town were still arranging matters to suit their own convenience. They succeeded in putting a number of men in office whose presence there is a public disgrace; they succeeded also in helping to consummate the sale of the senatorship to Simon Guggenheim and now they are getting ready to make themselves impregnable by gaining complete control of the city government. What the consequences of their victory would be can be easily guessed by everybody who recalls city administrations prior to the present one.

It was bad enough when we had only one boss but now that we have a boss trust it is far worse. A few years ago the people were taught to look to Mr Boynton as the Republican Pooh Bah, but pretty soon Mr Fairley loomed up on the sky line as a rival. At first it [illegible] Mr Fairley was supposed to be making a fight against bossism, at any rate he won a qualified victory, and forthwith [illegible] his old time hatred of one-man power. His viewpoint changed and what had seemed odious before now looked rather good. It was the old story over again. He looked at bossism at close range and the rest is told in Pope's quatrain:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien
As to be hated needs but to be seen
Yet seen too oft familiar with her face
We first endure then pity then embrace

Mr Fairley embraced the role of boss and he has been embracing it ever since. After a while he and Mr Boynton apparently concluded a treaty of peace for they have been working in harmony ever since—and now we have the boss trust. It succeeded in stifling competition last fall with results the evil of which is apparent to everybody.

This is the situation that has made necessary the organization of a non partisan movement to take an active part in the coming municipal campaign with the objects stated in the platform published yesterday. It is a platform that can be supported by every citizen regardless of party affiliations, who wants to see Colorado Springs governed in the best interests of the whole people. It provides for the selection of candidates for public office solely on the ground of fitness without regard to party considerations or party service. It declares for the strict enforcement of all laws and the application of business principles to every department of the city government. It insists on the control and proper regulation of public utilities according to law and declares against granting any franchise without submission to a popular vote and without adequate return to the city or its citizens.

There is nothing freaky or impractical in this platform. It is simply a straightforward declaration of principles which must be recognized at a glance as based on honesty and common sense. With such a platform put into practice the taxpayers of Colorado Springs would be saved thousands of dollars every month and the city would be governed more honestly, more efficiently and more economically than it has ever been. And if the people give the Municipal League the support it deserves this condition will be brought about.

ROOSEVELT WANTS BATTLESHIPS.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S letter to the House Committee on Naval Affairs urging the authorization of two battleships, "each of maximum size speed and gun power," is a characteristic document. With the exception of Captain Hobson there is no more ardent exponent of a big navy [illegible] attord to fall behind, he says "and we shall fall behind if we fail to build first class battleships. Unless we intend to go on building up the fleet, we should abandon every effort to keep the position which we now hold."

This is good sound doctrine. But whether it will be agreed to by Congress to the extent of authorizing the two battleships asked for is another matter. The custom has been for that body to authorize at least one new battleship every year—for several years it voted two or three each time but lately there has been a good deal of opposition because of the steadily increasing cost of the craft. Last winter one battleship was provisionally authorized, but its size speed and gun power were not defined principally because the Navy Department did not know just what it wanted. At that time the 18,000-ton British monster, "Dreadnought," was exciting naval circles throughout the world. Germany France Japan and Russia were planning ships to be superior to it if possible and our own department wanted to at least keep up with the procession.

Plans for the big craft provisionally authorized by Congress were completed last fall and as expected they call for a ship of 20 000 tons—by far the largest in the world. Congress now seems disposed to let its authorization of the one ship do for both sessions but the President insists on two of the same kind—that is one other in addition to the one voted last winter.

The rapidly increasing cost of the Navy is not a subject to contemplate with enthusiasm but it can not be denied that this money is really a premium on insurance against war. So long as it is known that the United States is able to hold its own against any other Power on the high seas we are reasonably safe from attack. But nations are like individuals—they are ready to pounce upon the one who is too weak to defend himself. There is not a nation on earth that would dare to go to war with Great Britain simply because the British navy could not only defend England but could destroy the shipping of the enemy and blockade any of its ports.

Twenty-thousand-ton battleships come high but all of the other naval powers are building them so it is evident that we must have them. The rivalry for the command of the seas is a deplorable thing but there is no early prospect of it ending and just now he who hesitates is lost.

HUMAN ADJUSTMENT TO FLATS

From the Washington Star

Scientists are basing calculations on a skull discovered in Nebraska to show that the average height of man on this continent 200 000 years ago was seven feet. This is interesting. If people continue to shrink at the rate of a foot and some inches every 200 000 years in the course of time the average flat will be abundantly roomy.

WORK AND FATIGUE

From the Paris Revue

What fatigues the motive power is getting to work. Once the mind is fascinated and the field of consciousness restricted to a single object the brain works without exhausting itself. BUILDING TO THE CLOUDS

From the Boston Transcript

If skyscrapers in New York continue to mount higher, each year the residential problem of the city may some time be met in this way. When twenty stories told the height of the highest office building in the world many people believed that the limit had been reached that climbing skyward had gone as far as it could. But the present proposition to build a skyscraper to a height more than twice as great shows us that in all probability the end is not even yet in sight. If the apartment house could have as many stories there would not be so much need to tunnel to Long Island and New Jersey to find sleeping places for business people of New York.

THE CRIME OF NOISE

From the Detroit Free Press

The battering down of popular fallacy is the work of time though it is not long since smoke was regarded as the greatest evidence of industry and activity, an error that is all but banished. There are those who still crudely think noise to be even more incontrovertible as evidence of enterprise and prosperity, a sacred tradition that is being bombarded by uttl[?] ones-society in the east and which will suffer violation from the sacrilegious hands of congress in antinoise marine legislation. Instead of being any longer a stout warrant of industrial thrift smoke is now regarded as evidence of waste sloth neglect and incompetence. Noise is no less a waste of industrial energy. Within ten years the noisy city will be on a par with the smoky city.

INCREASE IN INSANITY DOUBTED.

From the Syracuse Post-Standard

Expert students of the problem of insanity are by no means unanimous in the opinion that the percentage of insane persons is increasing. There are two reasons for questioning whether such is the case. One reason is that only a few years ago it was the common practice among Americans to keep their insane at home. If especially violent they were confined in some remote room in the house, sometimes chained to the floor. If only crazy they were allowed the freedom of the neighborhood. Even if all of them however had been counted there might still be errors in the argument. To be a proper subject for custody treatment such as is given in our great hospitals for the insane at the present time it is not necessary that the patient should be a menace to society, a sufferer of homicidal mania or a person out of his head all the time. Beyond question a great number of persons are counted insane by modern methods of diagnosis who were not so counted by the hit-or-miss methods of an early time.

PATRONIZING THE BIBLE

If there is anything worse than blank infidelity it is infidelity masquerading as Christianity and as advanced thought and this is illustrated in the recent criticisms of Professor George Burnham Foster of the University of Chicago on a new book by Rev W C Selleck of Providence, R I both of them being Baptist ministers.

Professor Foster is the author of the book called "The Finality of the Christian Religion" which [illegible] ago and Mr Selleck's book is called "The New Appreciation of the Bible." Professor Foster's book candidly admitted that Christianity which everyone knows is the religion of the end of the world was not a finality but would give place to some other, long before the heavens "departed as a scroll that is rolled together." Of course such a doctrine amounted to a repudiation of the New Testament, which on every page proclaims that Christianity would endure until Christ came in the clouds in person to inaugurate the final judgment.

Mr Selleck's book is designed to show that the Bible is not inspired nor infallible and it is not at all strange that Professor Foster should be delighted with the book that echoes his sentiments and that he should make its appearance the occasion of some backhanded compliments for the Bible.

In expressing his opinion he says that while he is compelled to surrender the divine origin of the Bible and while he thinks every theory of inspiration is unverifiable he admits that the Bible contains the highest moral truths and those that are the most important to religious guidance and that on the whole it is "the best book in the world."

Lord Bacon says that what makes an ape so repulsive is its resemblance to a man and what makes Professor Foster so repulsive is his affectation of Christianity and his pedantic patronage of the Bible.

Everybody must see at a glance that he is not sincere. The Bible claims to have come from God and one of the most constantly expressed doctrines in it is that of inspiration. The same argument for its divine origin may be made that is made for the divinity of Christ. When it is said that Christ was only a good man the reply is that if he were a good man he would not have represented himself as God. In like manner the Bible can not be the "best book in the world" if it falsely claims a divine origin and inspiration.

The conclusion is inevitable therefore that Professor Foster and Mr Selleck do not believe in a shred of Christianity. The religion of Christ is everything or nothing and the Bible is either an inspired and infallible guide to men or it is nothing. As soon as they suffer the least discount they vanish. Everybody who is honest and sincere must range himself with Dr Torrey and his theory of back to back inspiration of the Bible or with Mr Mangasarian and his utter repudiation of Christ and the Bible.

If Christ exists and the Bible is his book Mr Mangasarian will arrive in heaven a long time before Professor Foster and Mr Selleck arrive there.

ADVERTISING COLORADO SPRINGS

To the Editor of The Gazette

Referring to my letter on the question of advertising Colorado Springs as a resort for sufferers from lung trouble and The Gazette's editorial comment on same appearing in the morning paper will say to let it go at that. I could not understand why that topic should be singled out as an especial feature to advertise. But the public will of course understand that the motive prompting The Gazette to yield space and of scribblers who take up time in discussing such questions is all for the betterment of Colorado Springs and the public good.

Every citizen should feel a keen interest in his town and lose no opportunity to boost. From surface indications one observes by mixing with the people during a day or hunds one of the most deplorable evidences now prevalent is the cry of dull times and a falling off of business in the Springs. About every other man you meet is saying something about the [illegible] the dull [illegible]. That sort of talk is what brings bad times and is also what kills towns. On duty a citizen [illegible] country is to move out if the town does not suit him. More enthusiasm and determination to do something is one essential prescription.

All independent newspapers are usually ten or twenty years ahead of the town. That editorial in yesterday's Gazette "Farming in El Paso County" was a fine thing. Some of the country people appear to labor under the impression that Colorado Springs is a little world unto itself, a very mistaken idea; of course such editorials like this is calculated to bring about a better understanding, a better feeling and needed information. It appears to many of us that Colorado Springs is progressing nicely in fact enjoying general prosperity along with other cities yet in a multitude of counsel there is wisdom and an exchange of ideas is always helpful. If the city needs any one thing more than another it would seem to be a coming together upon broad commercial lines and get every citizen in line as a worker for the common welfare pointing to a great cosmopolitan center and all be harmonizers and boosters. A city possessed of so many and varied natural advantages can only be held in check from growing and expanding and climbing from one degree of greatness to another by its citizenship. Harmony all along the line from the least to the greatest must be the slogan.

Speaking of advertising Colorado Springs and sending missionaries abroad to preach about our climate reminds me of the miserable climatic conditions prevalent in portions of Illinois Indiana Missouri Kansas Mississippi and other sections of the country traversed by the Mississippi the Missouri the Ohio rivers and similar streams that are hotbeds of malaria in summer time. There are thousands of well to do people property holders and residents of malarial districts who should hunt freedom from excessive heat and malaria in summer time and to them Colorado Springs and surroundings would be a haven of rest, and no doubt many of them could be made permanent citizens here. There is at least one fertile field to work in and no doubt the railroads would gladly supplement any work done by our citizens pointing to advertising in that country.

STORK TAMPERS WITH THE JURY

They tell it on Joe but we do not vouch for the truth of it that on his arrival he put his horse in the corn and hung his saddle on the limb of a tree, hung the bridle on the door knob of his pretty home and in his excitement waded the chilly waters of New river and knocked for admission at the mill house door some distance away. It was of course, such thing must be a bit exciting but you must not lose your head in such a way.

THE ARISTOCRACY OF BOOKS

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger

ONE of the curious incidents of the current news—the immediate contemporary history was the ripple of excitement, international and domestic, occasioned within the past ten days by the report that a Japanese anarchist newspaper in San Francisco was advocating the summary suppression of all governments and rulers, including Japan's own mikado. The government is said to have investigated the matter there was an echo of the news in Japan and in Europe, and the world was agog. Upon inquiry it appeared that the propagator of the dire opinion was a wretched little Japanese bellboy or subaltern of some sort.

The incident is of value insofar as it illustrates a general symptom and tendency of the day—the readiness with which the world concerns itself with myriads of trivialities and magnifies them by heeding them. It the fly in Aesop's fable—the fly that sat on the axle of the chariot and exclaimed "What a dust I do raise"—were to make the boast now, the egotism would not be wholly unfounded.

The particular buzzing however which is the most annoying to serious-minded people who estimate cause and effect is that made by the avalanche of the trivial, stale, flat unprofitable reading that engages the attention of so many millions of real human beings who not only count in the census, but —so great are their numbers—must count very heavily in determining the moral character and mental vigor of the next generation.

What an incredibly great sin the foolish insipid mischievous common books cause in the world today, and how pathetic and lamentable must be the effects on a people and a nation of "the misuse of books, the debilitating waste of brain in aimless, promiscuous vapid reading or even, it may be, in the poisonous inhalation of mere literary garbage and bad men's worst thoughts."

"A book's a book although there's nothing in't." Such seems to be the value put upon print in an indiscriminating era. More men, women and children read books today than ever before in the world's history and many of them read a prodigious deal of printed matter but it is chiefly sad stuff. The educated well read man of twenty years ago seems to be disappearing and the few survivors find a strange desolation in the haunts of men. A score of years ago educated men read Carlyle Macaulay; they knew their Boswell and Burke; they followed Matthew Arnold with keen interest; they rejoiced in the possession of the works of that doughty champion of free government Daniel Webster; they read Ruskin and Mill and recognized in Cardinal Newman the exquisite model of academic purity "the modern master of prose the exemplar of the scholar and gentleman."

Speak to an ordinary group of educated men now of these authors and it appears that they are but names. Shakespeare and Milton have gone out of style and a reference to them is not readily apprehended. Dryden and Pope are myths, Goldsmith and Addison are only thin ghosts, the philosophers are unknown, history is voted dull, the great novelists have been thrust aside and the conversation is directed toward the possibilities of certain mining stocks or to the chances of certain railroad securities.

Men are just as intelligent now as they ever were, but the modern generation is suffering acutely from "dissipated attention." The results were recently strikingly illustrated in the persons of two brothers. The one upon leaving college embarked upon business in Philadelphia. He played a little tennis, dabbled in amateur photography, read the usual new novels turned over his share of the magazines, went to the theater as often as the average young man, dipped into the usual social diversions and thus his leisure was pretty well taken up. The other brother went west to look after some timber interests. He was in a remote spot and was deprived of all the advantages of a civilized life. He had a number of books with him [illegible] these he read and reread and mastered. When he returned to the east and civilization, lo! he was the civilized man with a well-stored mind practiced in independent thinking. It was evident that he had parleyed with wisdom, that he had a grasp of general principles and that altogether the results of his ten years' diversions had been the maturing of his mind and judgment. The other brother of equal natural ability was not a cultivated man; he had frittered his time away and knew nothing at all.

A good book is the precious life blood of a master spirit embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. The number of the good books constitutes a wonderful storehouse of treasure. It is the real aristocracy of the world. In the living society of any particular day there is elbowing and jostling, cringing and meanness and in the collection of people there are the unworthy and unfit. But "this eternal court of good books is always open and in that society may be found the mighty of every place and time." Ruskin has a word to say of the duty of the reader.

This court of the past differs from all living aristocracy in this—it is open to labor and to merit but to nothing else. No wealth will bribe, no name overawe, no artifice deceive the guardian of those Elysian gates. In the deep sense no vile or vulgar person ever enters there. At the portières of that silent Faubourg St Germain there is but one brief question: Do you deserve to enter? Pass. Do you ask to be the companion of nobles? Make yourself noble and you shall be. Do you long for the conversation of the wise? Learn to understand it and you shall hear it. But on other terms? No. If you will not rise to us we cannot stoop to you.

ORDEAL AWAITS BRYCE

London Cable to the New York Times

Of all the trials and tribulations that await Ambassador Bryce in Washington there is according to an article in one of the evening papers today nothing that he giz[?] to compare with that awesome institution the American press. In the Washington correspondent Mr Bryce is informed he will encounter foes much worse to be overcome with ordinary diplomatic skill. They will treat him it is predicted with the same degree of consideration they extend to the president and the members of his cabinet and no more, and will decline to consider any proposition that he be made an exception to their rule that nothing and nobody is sacred.

Mr Bryce is advised to profit by the experience of his predecessors and on this point the writer of the article remarks:

When that austere but splendid diplomat Lord Pauncefote first came to Washington imbued with the British statesman's ideas of journalistic ethics the ordeal he was compelled to face from constant free-and-easy assaults by busy newspaper men during the Venezuelan crisis almost maddened him. Had it not been for the presence of his secretary the indefatigable penman would probably have driven him from the country. Even to the day of his death he was never able to get along with the American press but just before his death he consented to be the guest of honor of the Gridiron club.

"I am very glad to see you gentlemen all here" he said in his slow drawling speech and the diners cheered him lustily. "I am glad to see you all here" he repeated pausing to rub and readjust his eyeglasses "because for the time being anyway I know you are out of mischief elsewhere."

That speech almost made him popular and doubtless Mr Bryce has heard of it. Certainly Sir Michael Herbert and Sir Mortimer Durand did for they were much more democratic and approachable and both left behind them countless pleasant memories in official circles as well as among the unofficial but politically potent members of the fourth estate.

ANTI-SUICIDE BUREAU

From the Kansas City Journal

Word come from London that General William Booth has begun the new year by establishing an anti suicide bureau where the distressed and the friendless may apply for hope and encouragement. While there has been considerable [illegible] on both sides of the water as to the good that could be accomplished by such a bureau this is the first actual experiment attempted along that line. It will be watched with interest and if it succeeds in preventing a fair percentage of suicides the plan will probably be adopted in other parts of the globe.

The anti-suicide bureau is founded upon the assumption that many people are driven to the desperate act of self-destruction because of their utter friendlessness and because there is no one to whom they may turn in their misery for advice and consolation. It is probably true that most of the suicides of a great city are of this class. However if one were to attempt a classification of the causes of suicide it would be found a hopeless task. But at the bottom of such crimes among the poor of the great centers of population there is one general condition—a listless resignation to what appears to be inexorable fate. Thousands upon thousands of men and women succumb yearly to the accumulating miseries of unmitigated poverty and hopeless disease. To them the future stretches black and pitiless.

If General Booth can succeed in inducing would be suicides to visit his bureau doubtless many lives will be saved. Self destruction is usually an act of impulse incited by a momentary exaggeration of unhappy environment. In such cases the deliberation involved in a visit to the anti suicide bureau would give time for a recovery of mental equilibrium. A man who is fired with the frenzy for taking his own life might be saved if the bureau could go to him at the critical moment, but it is scarcely justifiable to hope that he would stay the revolver the knife or the poison until he could visit the anti suicide bureau.

However there are men and women in the world who need advice and human consolation in their hours of misery and despair. Many of these are desperate because of illness or lack of employment. They could be saved if they would come to the bureau where the immediate bodily needs would be relieved. This is the class of people after all that is worth saving and from such ranks will be recruited those who compose the harvest of General Booth's bureau.

DO YOU RUN UPSTAIRS?

From the Chicago Record Herald

Why do persons run upstairs? An observer says that nearly everybody does. He declares that the most leisurely and sedate persons who on the street are notable for their dignity will ascend a stairway with a precipitancy quite out of keeping with the traits that distinguish them.

This inconsistency may be accounted for in the desire to shorten as much as possible a disagreeable task. The stairway confronts them. In the absence of elevators to reach the upper floors the ascent must be made. With a leap and a bound the climber if a man reaches the landing above in a jiffy clearing from two to four steps at a time. If a woman she gathers her skirts daintily about her and trips gayly if breathlessly to the regions above.

It is the occasional one only who climbs laboriously up a staircase and usually a superabundance of flesh is responsible when a man or woman fails to take a flight of stairs with a rush.

JAPS IN CALIFORNIA

Julius Kahn in the Independent

But the Japanese coolie who comes to California for the most part is an unskilled laborer. He is a cobbler tailor gardener cook waiter or other of a dozen classes. As a man, as the case may be. He can does live just as cheaply as the Chinaman. A handful of rice a little fish and a cup of tea make a meal for him. And we feel convinced that if he be allowed to come to these shores in undiminished numbers he will in a few years drive out all Caucasian competition in every occupation which he enters just as the Chinese coolie did a quarter of a century ago. He has already driven the cherry orchardist out of the productive Vaca valley about sixty miles north of San Francisco. And it is in the latter city that he is the greatest menace. To speak specifically let us take the case of a cobbler who has learned his trade in his own country. He has scarcely set foot in the city when he rents a dingy little shop in close proximity to a white shoemaker who has been established in that locality for many years. Then the little brown man puts up his sign and announces his scale of prices. A perusal of the latter shows that he asks about one-half the amount charged by his white neighbor for similar work. Gradually his business increases while that of his white neighbor diminishes. The white man with a white man's habits of living is trying to support his family decently and honestly, trying, you please, to give his children the benefit of a good education finds that he has been brought face to face with an alien competitor whose material wants are few and who can subsist on fare on which a Caucasian would starve. He tries to stand it for a little while but sooner or later when he sees the blanched faces of his little ones, when he begins to realize that he cannot provide for them as has been his wont, the iron enters his soul. He begins to understand that this unequal competition means that he must come down to the Japanese standard of living or he must quit the neighborhood in which he has been established the many years to begin anew the struggle for existence in some other section which the little brown man has not as yet invaded.

I have not overdrawn the picture. It has its counterpart in practically every street in San Francisco. It is such conditions that ultimately lead to bloodshed and race riot. We want by all means to avoid anything of this kind. We are peaceful law abiding citizens but we want the Japanese coolie kept out of our state. Nor do we think we are unreasonable in our demand. If similar conditions confronted the citizens of Massachusetts we feel confident that they too would feel as we do. The Japanese in his native land is a great fisherman. Suppose 10 000 of these Japanese fishermen should settle near Gloucester and embark in the codfishing industry. Would the Gloucester fishermen stand it with equanimity or would they like their brethren in California raise their voices in indignant protest. And so with every other community and every other class of workingmen.

Since the disastrous conflagration of last April the situation has been intensified by the manner in which many white tenants were practically evicted from their homes by the [illegible]. The latter elected to establish themselves in one of the most desirable residence sections of San Francisco. They would offer the landlords of property twice and thrice the amounts that were being paid by white tenants and if the latter had been dispossessed would open Japanese boarding houses with swarms of occupants in these desirable residences. When the white man saw that he was being ousted to make way for the Oriental it did not serve to establish a more cordial relationship between the races. One must also bear in mind that at this time by reason of the conflagration houses for rent were exceedingly scarce and many of the families thus dispossessed had to seek homes on the other side of the Bay of San Francisco.

How an American College Secured a Great Prize

ONE of Two Books Four Hundred Years Old, Telling How Columbus Discovered South America, now in the "Americana" Owned by Brown University—A Collection Valued by Authorities at a Million Dollars.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 19.—Up to a short time ago a thin little volume of sixteen leaves, known as "The Libretto" and prized as one of the treasures of the San Marco library in Venice, was supposed to be [illegible] as a document because it contains practically all our knowledge of the third voyage of Christopher Columbus, in which the great explorer first discovered the South American continent and followed its coastline for some hundreds of miles. As the only surviving copy, as it was believed, of a work printed at Venice in 1504 from material contained in some letters by Peter Martyr, one of the courtiers in attendance on the Spanish sovereign, it was valued as few books are.

Not many moths ago, however, a distinguished bibliographer and bookseller of the Italian city of Florence happened upon an ancient volume bound in fragments of medieval manuscript with its corners all nibbled away by mice. On examination he found that it consisted in the main of a seaman's guide, printed at Venice in 1490—such a one as Columbus himself may have been familiar with before he undertook his memorable voyage in 1492. Bound with this "portolano," as it is called, was, according to a fashion that was common in the days of the Renaissance, a perfect copy of the long-sought Libretto of 1504. From the copy in Venice the title page is missing; this has it in perfect state of preservation.

Knowing that he had unearthed a treasure, the bookseller forthwith communicated by cable with the John Carter Brown library, Providence, for he knew, as all students of American history know, that the library of Americana, or early American books and autograph letters, now connected with Brown university, is the most complete collection of its kind in the world, and that the rare volume would unquestionably be wanted in Providence if the means for its purchase were at hand.

The bibliographer had judged wisely. A message was hastily wired back to Florence to accept the proposition that the Libretto become at once the property of the John Carter Brown library, the authorities of which have the ambitious design of securing either a copy or a facsimile of everything printed in or about North or South America from Columbus' discovery through the year 1800.

The cable message, it may be added, arrived in the nick of time, for a rumor of the discovery had got abroad and telegrams were pouring in from libraries and individual collectors of Europe, the bibliographer was shortly after visited by a famous bookseller of Paris who sought to secure the treasure, and a little later by a gentleman from Brazil, owner of one of the best South American libraries, who made the trip to Florence for the express purpose of securing the book, if possible.

The incident illustrates the international reputation which foresight extending over the past three-quarters of a century has brought to this collection of books either printed in America or in Europe about the American colonies prior to the beginning of the nineteenth century. Begun as a private library by John Carter Brown of the class of 1816 at Brown university, enlarged by his widow and his sons, the late John Nicholas, and Harold Brown, and recently bequeathed to Brown university, it has a value which can not be estimated in terms of money—though Mr. Francis W. Halsey, author of "The Deluge of Books," has asserted that if it were put on sale it would bring at auction not less than a million dollars and probably more. Its real value, of course, appears [illegible] the interest of all the earth; in the uses to which it can be put by students of American history.

For nobody can adequately write early American history—that is with reference to original documents—without visiting Providence, which has several libraries of prime importance. To the John Carter Brown library in the days when, under private management, it was still always courteously thrown open to any properly accredited student, went among many others Professor Moses Colt Tyler, Justin Winsor, and John Fiske.

The present usefulness of such a library, while it is already supreme in its field, is as yet by no means so great as it may become. The plan is to have it contain eventually either an original of everything printed before 1801 or a photographic facsimile or a body of detailed information about it. This accomplished, the materials for the study of early American history at Brown university will be absolutely complete.

Such an undertaking is a large one, as everyone knows who has ever dipped into "Americana" and discovered how very busy the printing presses of early times were. They had no books which circulated into the hundreds of thousands, but of the making of little editions of a few hundred copies each there was almost no end, for the inkpots were stirred upon very slight occasion, in the days of our disputatious ancestors. One bibliography of the works printed in the English colonies between 1639 and 1764 gives 9,800 titles, and these are estimated by a good authority not to be more than one-quarter of all that actually were printed and bound in those years. All this, of course, without any account of the immense number of works printed in Spanish and Portuguese-speaking America, and without account of the works about America which were published on the other side of the Atlantic, but which properly belong in any collection of Americana.

THE JOHN CARTER BROWN LIBRARY AND ITS TREASURES.

The Long Sought Libretto, Bound in Mouse-Gnawed Mediaeval Parchment, on the Left Hand Side; on the Right the Title Page of an Early Spanish-American Illustrated Newspaper Which Had Circulation-Building Schemes and Other Up-to-Date Features.

So that, large as the John Carter Brown collection is with its nearly 18,000 volumes, much remains to be done, with the co-operation of scholars and collectors everywhere, to give it that transcendent importance which was the originator's idea. The habit of turning over valuable works to this library, on the principle that it can make best use of them, is an established one among collectors. In the latest report of the librarian a large number of recent accessions, by gift are reported, along with the purchase of many treasures of prime value.

The John Carter Brown collections are thoroughly accessible withal, as everyone finds who wishes to consult the volumes, in a beautiful building at the southeastern corner of the middle campus of Brown university. Among the collections are not less than five editions of the letter in which Columbus told a reawakened Europe of his adventures in a new world. The manuscript which the explorer dictated in Santo Domingo, while he was on his third voyage, and in which he set forth his various claims, rights and privileges, is also at Providence.

In other directions of special patriotic interest the John Carter Brown library is strong, as in works by and relating to that insignificantly named, but otherwise conspicuous person, John Smith. Here, as is proper to a collection situated in Rhode Island, is a large group of works relating to Roger Williams, including his "Key to the Languages of America" and many controversial treatises. Clustering above all, around the great name of George Washington is an immense mass of original literature of priceless worth. The visitor sees notebooks in which the methodical father of his country kept carefully every item of expense, whether it was $15 for a case of porter or 10 cents expended on a tip.

The beginnings of the John Carter Brown library date back into our early history. Members of the Brown family, for whom the university was named, were collectors of books in pre-Revolutionary times. The gathering, however, of the present collection was due to John Carter Brown, born in 1797, and generally considered as the greatest connoisseur of Americana, probably outranking even James Lenox of New York. Mr. Brown at the outset of his collecting career included various specimens of the work of famous European exponents of the printing art, as of the Aldine family of Venice; but presently he limited the scope of his acquisitions to works printed before 1800 and bearing on North America and South America. He was immensely assisted in his undertaking by an eccentric but capable bibliophile, an American, resident for many years in London, who usually described himself as "Henry Stevens of Vermont, Bibliographer and lover of books, Fellow of (various learned societies), blackballed Athenaeum club of London, also Patriarch of Skull and Bones of Yale, and member of (various historic societies), B. A. and M. A. of Yale college, as well as citizen of Nottonagus, etc." With all his peculiarities, Mr. Stevens had remarkable genius for discovering important books and for discarding those of no value.

John Carter Brown on his death in 1874 left his private library to his minority of their two sons, John Nicholas Brown and Harold Brown. John Nicholas Brown, reaching his majority in 1882, disclosed the same remarkable abilities as collector that his father had shown and was ably assisted by his younger brother. He determined to establish the library permanently as a memorial to his father, and after his death in 1900 a will to that effect was produced, leaving to two trustees, one of whom was his brother Harold, the duty of disposing of the collection. The younger brother died shortly after, and the trustees who finally decided to give the library in trust to Brown university were G. W. R. Matteson and Robert H. I. Goddard of Providence. Recently the commodious building in which the library is now housed was dedicated and thrown open to the public.

It is commonly said that only rich [illegible] and the cases of Francis Parkman, John Codman Ropes, James Schouler, George Bancroft and William H. Prescott are quoted in illustration. Consultation of original documents involves a great deal of traveling and many other expenses. With the concentration however of Americana in Providence, [illegible] many departments of American history can be studied without any considerable outlay for journeys to sources of original information and the general public, which is intensely interested in the original documents of our own past, can [illegible] find them to greatly interest in the John Carter Brown Library.

PLAYED HE WAS A LILIPUTIAN.

Whitehall (N. Y.) Dispatch to the New York World.

Six-year-old Johnnie Caine, of this town, received for one of his christmas presents a book containing an account of Gulliver's Travels and thought it would be great sport to play he was a Liliputian. To this end he swapped a red tin horn for a ball of kite twine and waited for his mother to take a nap like Gulliver.

The other afternoon Mrs. Caine put the clothes in a wash boiler, and while they were boiling over a husk fire lay down on the dining-room lounge to rest. Soon she fell asleep, and Johnnie got busy. His mother's apron was over her head, and as she is a sound sleeper, it didn't take the lad long to tie her down so tightly that she couldn't move a peg.

Having finished the job, Johnnie's enthusiasm began to subside, and visions of a sound flogging loomed up on the horizon. The vision soon developed into a specter, and Johnnie retreated to confide in the boy with whom he had swapped playthings. The longer he stayed the less anxious he was to return for the neighbor's boy seemed to take particular delight in forecasting what would have happened to him had he been so daring as to play Liliputian. His description was so glowing that Johnnie almost smarted by suggestion.

About an hour and a half after she was tied down Mrs. Caine was awakened by the smell of burning cotton. She tried to arise, but couldn't. Her hands, feet, and body were tightly ensnared, and the more she writhed the more firmly she was held. Her voice was left to her, however, and Johnnie and all the neighbors soon heard wild yells for help issuing from the Caine house. The neighbors responded in droves, but Johnnie hid in a hen-house.

When the neighbors arrived they found that the water had evaporated from the boiler and that the week's wash was a pile of cinders and charred rags. They threw the smoking boiler out of doors, and then liberated the irate Mrs. Caine, who went on a still hunt for Liliputian Johnnie. What happened to him is too painful to relate.

MERMAIDS IN "PETER PAN."

From the New York Times.

Mermaids are certainly the vogue in New York. A new scene entitled "Marooner's Rock," or "The Mermaid's Lagoon," has been interpolated into "Peter Pan," which has consequently become a fantasy in no less than six acts. In the first act Peter promises to show Wendy some real mermaids, and in this added third act he keeps his word to the letter. When the curtain rises the mermaids are the very first things to be seen by the audience.

Peter and the boys go swimming out to the rock, and after various adventures Peter and Hook, the pirate captain, have a mortal combat and both fall into the lagoon. Peter having been wounded by the captain's hook. The other boys made their escape and Wendy and Peter are left alone on the rock with the tide fast rising.

Peter rescues Wendy by tying her to the tail of John's kite. She is too weak to fly and his wound is so severe he can himself neither fly nor swim. Now he is all alone on the rock and the curtain falls. In an instant it is up again. The "wonderfulest boy in all the world" is not going to give up as easily as that. Early in the scene a large seabird has appeared, floating on her nest, too courageous to desert her charge. Now the mother bird is seen to fly straight up to the sky and later rides to safety in the nest.

DINNER.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

"Dinner, as physicians and laymen agree, should not consist of the pound of beef and quart of coffee the condemned murderer swallows upon the eve of his hanging to rob death of its sting and the grave of its victory. A plate of soup, a piece of steak, a fish or a fowl, with a salad, some vegetables, a dessert and coffee constitute the dinner of unostentatious variety. Patriarchs tell us that such a dinner was once obtainable in San Francisco and in New York, and at intermediate points, at prices not prohibitive to the man of moderate income, but such a meal ordered a la carte in our modern restaurants is too expensive for the majority of patrons and too large a dinner for one man to consume. The trouble is that each 'portion' is too large. The existing arrangement of 'portions' and prices causes us to eat too much meat and die of kidney disease, or else to forswear meats and die of indigestion with its various and tragic ramifications. Our alternative is to court lingering death at the moderate priced table d'hote where is served imitation food, long-cooked and without savor.

Favorsham, Matinee Idol, Slept on Park Seats

GREATEST Lover on Stage Tells How He Was Plumber's Assistant on Harlem Bridge Met Late Baroness Star in "The Squaw Man" Says Burdett-Coutts Gave Him Coin When He Stole Her Apples as a Boy.

From the Philadelphia North American.

SOME subtle influence in that opprobrious epithet, "Matinee Girls' Idol," which is usually attached to his name, had given me an unpleasant impression of William Alfred Faversham. My hazy mental picture showed a large, handsome, stockish young man, who talked loud in public, patronized everybody, was desperately bored, don't you know, and regretted that there was no one else to share with him the worship of the female population.

Conceited actors and conceited soldiers are about the most trying mortals on earth, and it was with no very pleasurable anticipations that I sent up a card to the Faversham apartments in the Hotel Pittsburg.

A tall, well-built young woman, dressed for comfort in a plain shirt waist and skirt, was making a mild protest to the clerk about the heat in her rooms. On her right arm was a youngster about a year old, with bright blue eyes and curly golden hair. He was a good deal of a chunk, but she carried him as easily and tenderly as though he had been a bunch of roses.

Is Introduced to Actor's Baby

"Do you want to see Mr. Faversham?" she asked, when she heard the clerk's name mentioned. "I am Mrs. Faversham, and this," swinging the baby into the foreground, "is Bill-Bill Faversham."

William Crozier Faversham—that is Bill-Bill's full name—stared hard, as who should say: "I don't recall ever having met you before, and I don't care much about you, either. I think I'll stick close to my mamma." Thereupon he turned his back on me squarely and buried his face in Mrs. Faversham's back hair.

Like his mother, who on the stage retains her maiden name, Julie Opp, Bill-Bill is an American. He was born in New York only fourteen months ago, and already he is the principal star in the Faversham solar system. When we got upstairs all he had to do was to fall on his father's neck and he was master of the situation.

"You see," said the beaming actor, "we've been away from him so long that we can't get enough of him. He came over from New York to spend Christmas and New Year's with us."

It began to be a question whether Bill-Bill would permit an interview, but presently he signified a desire to be put down, caught up a woolly monkey by one leg and went careening out of the room, never so much as giving us a parting glance. His mother followed, closing the door behind her to prevent Bill-Bill from changing his imperious mind.

"Bless his little heart!" chuckled the actor. "Now I guess we can talk in peace."

Somehow the preconceived picture of Faversham had faded. He wasn't at all a typical matinee girl's idol; he didn't show the slightest trace of conceit, but, on the contrary, was rather deprecatory in his remarks about himself; he was enthusiastic about everything, had a good mirthful laugh and smoked a homely old pipe while he talked.

Youngest of Thirteen Children.

His early trials and tribulations took up most of the conversation. Faversham wasn't born with a silver spoon in his mouth. He was the youngest of thirteen children in an English family, and he has done pretty nearly everything that a chap (he is still English enough to say chap) in hard luck could do, including sleeping on park benches.

If he were a simon pure, tribute-levying matinee idol, he would have shied at that part of his career, and kept to his laurels, but he didn't, and you couldn't help liking him for it. The death of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts was still fresh in his mind, and it recalled all incidents of the days when he was not prosperous.

His uncle, Baron Henley, had taken him out of Chigwell's grammar school—the Chigwell's mentioned in Dickens' "Barnaby Rudge"—and put him in the Hillmartin college, which is beside the estate of the Baroness Burdett-Coutts. Young Faversham was stealing apples in the baroness' orchard, and the gardener caught him. He was belaboring the youngster with a stick, when the baroness, who was taking tea with some of her friends, spied him and told him to bring the apple thief to her.

"She told me," said Faversham, "that it was very wrong of me to steal her apples, and then, when she found that I was poor, she gave me a guinea."

Although the younger sons were not well provided for, the Favershams (pronounced with a short "a" in the first syllable and no "a" at all in the last syllable) were an excellent family. The actor's mother was of good Spanish descent. His paternal grandfather served with the duke of Wellington. His father, John Alan Faversham, and four of his brothers served in the British army, the eldest brother being killed in the late Boer war at the age of 66. The actor and a civilian brother, who is now in Calcutta, are the only survivors of the thirteen children.

William Alfred was born in St. John's Wood, West London, February 12, 1868. Before that happy event his father died, leaving a limited fortune in underground railway stocks, which were sold by the widow at a tremendous sacrifice.

From the Hillmartin school William was taken by the eldest brother to Bengal, India, and enrolled in the army training school.

His First "Shy" at the Stage.

"My brother was very gruff and severe with me," he said, "and to get away from him I induced one of the doctors to declare me physically unfit, so that I could get back home. On the voyage I met a London actor named Hamilton Piffard, who thought he saw symptoms of talent in my singing and dancing performances, and induced me to take a shy at the stage.

"I had to run away from home to do it. It would never have done to let mother know. My first performance was as Osric to Mr. Piffard's Hamlet. Then Carlotta Leclercq took me in. She was a successful actress, who conducted a sort of dramatic school, and took her pupils on tour in preference to [illegible] seasons in London. That season she was bringing out a very handsome woman as Juliet, and I was cast to play Romeo.

"Miss Leclercq got me a place in Irving's Lyceum theater company at $15 a week, and I attended one rehearsal. On my way home I met one Horace Barrie, who offered me $20 a week to join his stock company in Ramsgate and play leading juvenile parts.

"I went in a hurry, and I may say right here that I never got a penny of salary, although I was promoted to the first place in the company after a week or two. We often slept on the sand, under the bathing machines, and when we got hungry we would go to Barrie's kitchen, bedroom, drawing room and workshop, which was under the theater stage, and demand that he set out whatever he had in the way of provisions.

Acted in Buffalo Bill Play.

We dramatized all the novels of the day and most of Dickens' works, and we even dramatized Buffalo Bill's show, with great success. I played Buffalo Bill, and thought myself very grand when I got on that fierce moustache, slouch hat and revolver. Of course, the company was as English as it could be. Most of the members had a strong Cockney dialect, and I can imagine now that the performance must have been exceriatingly funny. Buffalo Bill's manager stopped us at last, but it was such a good joke that he bought us all drinks, and he introduced me to his friend, Robert J. Bonner, an American horseman, who was then at Ramsgate. Mr. Bonner used to take me riding behind his fast horses, and it was he who persuaded me to go to America.

"To make the trip I borrowed $15 from a sister in London, the only member of my family who knew where I was or what I was doing. It was a dreadful voyage of seven weeks, and there was some sort of an epidemic in the steerage that killed off [illegible] many of the immigrants. But if the delay was an ill wind for them, it was a good wind for me. We used to have boxing bouts on board, every participant putting up half a crown, and I would bet the purse almost every day. Then I met a theatrical manager named Flemming, who was coming to America to star a beautiful British barmaid, Ellen Hastings, in a piece called 'Pen and Ink.'

"He took a fancy to me and gave me an engagement. We landed January 2, 1887, and opened in the Union Square theater. The play was a flat failure and closed in two weeks, but in the meantime Daniel Frohman had seen it, and he signed a contract with me for five years, beginning on November 19 of that year.

Goes to Western Ranch.

"The problem was how to keep myself going for those ten months. It occurred to me that one of my brothers, who was killed in India, owned a half interest in a ranch at Nunda, Colo., and that I might go out and collect. I borrowed the price of a railroad ticket and, with my beloved bull terriers, Sambo and Spot, on the way.

"Until the time of his death, a few years ago, 'Sambo' was almost as famous as his master. They were always together. The ranchman at Nunda [illegible] Sambo and Spot. He put the young actor on the most vicious ponies he owned and did his best to get him killed, and at last Faversham was glad to accept $250 as a settlement in full.

"When I got back to New York I was in desperate straits," he said. "With Sambo curled up beside me I would sleep on the park benches. Until finally the cops got on to me and I had to move on. I walked up to the Harlem river, where they were building the Washington bridge, and asked for a job. The workmen twitted me about my English accent and wanted to know if my dog would fight. I offered to bet him against anything [illegible] of his weight, and before long we got right friendly.

"They gave me work as a plumber's assistant, and I was employed as a laborer on the bridge until it was time to begin my engagement with Mr. Frohman."

Makes Hit in "Aristocracy."

In the Lyceum stock company at that time were Georgia Cayvan, Herbert Kelcey, Henry Miller, LeMoyne, Grace Henderson, Charles Walcott and several others whose names are well known. David Belasco was stage manager. At Faversham's request Frohman released him to become leading man with Mrs. Fiske, and it was shortly after that he made his first big hit in "Aristocracy." His most successful ventures were in "Lord and Lady Algy" and "Brother Officers."

Mr. Faversham married Miss Julie Opp four years ago. She is a writer as well as an actress, and has just published in novel form the play in which she and her husband are now appearing at the Garrick, "The Squaw Man."

Connected with their courtship there was an interesting incident. Miss Opp and her mother were going to England for the summer. She invited Mr. Faversham to call on them.

"We have taken a house from Mr. and Mrs. Richard Le Gallienne," she said. "It is at Chiddingfold."

"Chiddingfold!" exclaimed Faversham. "What house is it?"

"The manor house," said Miss Opp.

"Why, my dear!" replied the actor, almost with tears in his eyes: "I have known that house from my childhood. I know every room in it. My mother and I used to visit there frequently, and it was one of my childish dreams to buy the place."

So he visited Miss Opp at Chiddingford, and there, under the spreading trees, which he dreamed as a boy, "the greatest [illegible] on the American stage" made love in good earnest. They became engaged there, and before they left Faversham had bought the Le Gallienne lease, with the privilege of buying the property outright at its expiration.

"If my mother could only have lived to know that I had realized that ambition!" he sighed.

On his English farm Mr. Faversham raises chickens and hounds and horses.

"It isn't true that poultry raising doesn't pay," he said. "I made $1,600 on my chickens last year."

Keep On Invading Canada

Ottawa Correspondence Chicago Chronicle.

Talk about the American invasion! What with the Standard Oil buying up large silver properties in Cobalt, the Guggenheims trying to get a controlling interest in the gold diggings of the Yukon and the Tiffanies sending agents all over the new blue clay belt looking for diamonds, things are becoming pretty serious.

All this is true, however. Perhaps the amounts invested are not so enormous as they are said to be, but they are at any rate sufficiently large to show Canadians that they are allowing opportunities to slip away from them. The latest purchase made by the Standard Oil is that of the Threthewey mine in Cobalt, which is credited to the company.

The sale was made for $1,000,000 at a meeting of the directors this last week at which the deal was virtually confirmed, although the names of the purchasers were not officially given out. It was decided to convert the $5 shares into $1 shares so that instead of 200,000 shares at $5 there will now be 1,000,000 shares at $1 each. It was also decided to declare within the next two weeks a dividend of not less than 10 per cent.

The negotiations for the sale of the claim have been going on for the last two months. At the very start $100,000 was paid down, with the provision that a similar amount should be paid on the sixth of November. This also was done.

The Guggenheims of New York have not less than $20,000,000 invested in claims along Bonanza creek in the Yukon. They employ two large dredges, have built a dam and have made a ditch from 60 to 70 miles long to carry water to their claims.

Smuggling Trade Good.

While the United States millionaires continue to invade Canada the Canadian smugglers keep up their visits to the United States. People who are on the inside say that never before has the smuggling industry been so prosperous. Chinamen are no longer a very profitable article of contraband, but opium, phenacetine and unhealthy immigrants are pushed across the border in great quantities and numbers.

The frontier, the smugglers say, is but very carelessly guarded and they maintain that it would create the greatest of astonishment if the names of some of the prominent men in the United States who are agents of the smuggling trust in the United States were published. It is hinted that some of the officials even are mixed up in the work.

Furs are being smuggled actively just now and so generally. Is it admitted that nearly all wholesale fur houses in Canada indulge in this that several of the proprietors are prevented from visiting the United States.

The modus operandi consists in selling furs to the United States visitors in the summer or autumn to be delivered in the winter, duty and cost of transportation to be included in the purchasing price. Many a railway conductor and porter has "come a cropper" through succumbing to the generous offers made to bring furs into the United States for wholesale houses.

Something new in the way of importations into Canada will be the consignment of Australian sheep which will arrive from Auckland by the Allan line steamer Pondo. The first shipment will be of 1,500 head, and to show that there is no deception the shipments will be made on the hoof and the animals will be of different ages. They will reach the rest of Canada through the Pacific coasts ports and will create additional activity at Vancouver and Victoria.

There will be no international yacht races for the Seawanhaka cup for small yachts next year. There was some talk of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht club challenging Manchester for it, but they tried a new designer recently out from Scotland and his boat was not considered swift enough to have any show.

Some half-hearted attempts were made to get George Herrick Duggan to design a boat again, but he is so busy with the [illegible] conditions of the Dominion Steel company that he has not time and Shearwood, his former partner in the designing work for the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht club, also showed little inclination to design this year.

So that there will be no challenge till 1908 at any rate, and it is doubtful that a race will be held even then, because it is understood that the next America's cup race will also take place in that year.

The situation is a little hard on the other small boat clubs of the United States, who have never have had a chance at the international cup yet, for until the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht club brings the cup back again or some other Canadian or English cup captures it the other clubs in the United States can not get a chance at it.

Her Compromise Breakfast

From the New York Press.

No two women should try to live together," declared the bachelor girl, "be they mother and daughter, cousin and aunt, or sisters. The natural sequence of such a situation is quarreling, recrimination, coolness, aloofness, unhappiness.

"Just to give one example. The other night I happened in on two sisters who were having their dinner in frozen silence, waited upon by their maid. They welcomed me cordially—anything to break the ice and introduce a ray of sunshine. They laughed and chatted with me in the dining room, which is in the back of their long, handsome railroad flat, which, by the way, is as nearly divided into two compartments as one flat can be, the elder sister living in the front, the younger in the back. It was a wonder to me that they dined together, but it was probably easier having only the one hall between them.

"As I say, we dined in the dining room of the younger sister. Then we went into the front parlor of the elder sister, a beautiful parlor with wide windows giving on the park. The elder sister had been a guest in the dining room. Now the younger was guest in the parlor.

"They conversed merrily, but the topics of their conversation jarred. They had various interests in life, the one totally apart from the other. However, they were polite except when their ideas clashed too harshly. Then there was some gentle sparring, gentle because I was there.

"I am very fond of these sisters. When they insisted that I stay all night I did so. Both offered me their beds. The younger sister's bed was next to the dining room in her part of the flat, the elder's was next to her parlor in the front. I hesitated. If I accepted the bed of the younger sister the elder would be offended, and vice versa. What to do?

"'Isn't there a middle room where I can sleep?' I asked after rapid mental calculation.

"There is," replied the elder sister and proceeded to show it to me.

"It was a room of exceeding smallness, about midway of the hall between the line which divided the sisters' living rooms, but I took it. Both stood by while I prepared for sleep, all happily chatting about one thing and another, as women will. At last, as the elder sister was about to turn out my light, she said to me:

"'In the morning Nina takes her breakfast in the dining room, but I take mine in the front room. You can breakfast with whichever of us you like.'

"Here was a poser to sleep on. At intervals during the night I waked to ponder on it. What should I do? If I breakfasted with the elder sister I would forever offend the younger one; if with the younger, I would offend the elder. [illegible] bodily, thinking it over, trying to solve it, that I slept till 9 o'clock on the following morning. When I waked the sunlight pouring into the dining room and along the hall looked inviting. How nice it would be to breakfast in there!

"I slipped on the kimono the maid left for me and went along the hall to the dining room. It was lovely. On the snowy tablecloth two plates had been laid. The younger sister evidently expected me to breakfast with her.

"I turned from the enticing sight and crept softly along the hall to the front parlor without waking either sister, who still slept. The front parlor, though sunless, was beautiful, the windows giving upon the park revealing vistas of green grass, pine trees and lake. There on the splendid mahogany table had been placed two trays—one for the elder sister, the other for me.

"Soft of foot and breathlessly I tiptoed back along the hall to the dining room and from there to the kitchen. I stood at the kitchen door.

"'Look here,' I whispered to the little maid who stood by the sunny window of the kitchen, waiting, 'I am not feeling well this morning. If you please you may bring me my breakfast in bed.'

MYSELF AND GOD.

From the London Chronicle.

The German emperor is always interesting, but not always original. A day or two ago he warned his sailormen that their dangerous occupation might leave them but a moment to remember three dear ones, the Almighty—and their supreme War Lord. That climax was forestalled by the college dean who objected to this writer's appearance at morning chapel in slippers. "If you would put on your boots," said the dean, who combined nervousness with a sense of dignity, "it would show more respect to the college, to Almighty God . . . and to—to Myself."

There is hardly anything a woman can forgive in a man less than being able to have a good time when he is not at home to worry for [illegible] baby should get sick.

COLLEGE NOTES

The engineering library of Colorado college has received from Bion J. Arnold of Chicago, who lectured here some time ago before the Pike's Peak Polytechnic society, a set of ten reports on the Chicago transportation problem, on the design of Chicago subways, and on specifications relating to the construction and operation of a municipal street railway for the city of Chicago. The books will be placed on the shelves of the Polytechnic library.

President Willits S. Sharpe expressed his opinions concerning local option in the last number of the Rocky Mountain Issue, a publication in the interest of the Anti-Saloon league of Colorado. He spoke as follows:—Without doubt the attempt to control the [illegible] traffic in intoxicating liquors is not only one of the most important that faces the American people, but is one of the most difficult. Any movement that will help to educate the people to the seriousness of the situation and set them to thinking in regard to the matter, is a good thing to do. One of the great advantages of local option is that it throws responsibility onto the smaller community and makes the people take up the responsibility as they ought to do. Anything that brings home the seriousness of the whole situation is of importance."

Miss Lena Broaddus, a sophomore at the college, will leave for her home at Salt Lake City as soon as the semester examinations are over. Miss Broaddus is a member of the Minerva society and is a popular young woman with all the students.

The Sigma Chi fraternity held a chapter dance in the Kinnikinnick last night. The guests of the fraternity were: Misses Clark, Whipple, Bernard, Pitts, Lee, Carey, Mack, Webb, Lennox, Wahl, Thompson, Rogers, McLain and the Misses Adams and Duncan of Denver.

Miss Sadie McDowell, '05, has been ill at her home in Denver.

The final examinations for the first semester will be held next week. The work has been satisfactory in most of the courses of study. The second semester will begin Monday, January 28.

Charles D. Hurrey, the active Christian worker, who will be the guest of the college Y. M. C. A. for three days the last of the month, is a young graduate of Michigan university and comes to the association here to give the young men some new ideas about the work.

The state convention of the College Young Men's Christian association will be held in Canon City on January 24, 25, 26 and 27. The delegation from here will number about forty. Clarence P. Dodge of this city will preside during the sessions of the convention. There will be delegations from Denver university, State university, State Normal, State Agricultural college and Colorado college.

The sophomore class will entertain the seniors the evening of February 22. The committee of entertainment is the Misses Johnson, Whipple, Collier, Finger, Hammond and Kittleman.

The alumni of the college praise very highly the work done by the glee club on their recent trip.

Mr. Morgan has resigned as assistant Y. M. C. A. treasurer and Mr. Stimon Smith has been elected to fill his place.

The debate between Cutler academy and East Denver High school has been arranged and will take place some time in March at Denver. Cutler submitted the question, which is: "Resolved, That there should be a national income tax." It is agreed between the teams that in the debate the question of constitutionality be wholly eliminated. Cutler has had no debate for the last two years, although up to that time an annual debate was always held, and Cutler was victorious several times. The work on the debate will be commenced at once.

Cutler academy is preparing to enter the state interscholastic oratorical contest which will take place in the near future. Miss Banghart will train the aspirants to places on the team that will represent the academy. The contest will be held in March.

Hesperian announces as one of their new members, Mr. Long.

Professor T. K. Urdahl announces that there will be two new law courses at the college this year. One on "Torts" will be given by O. B. Willcox, and the second on "Property," K. R. Babbitt. The work in both courses has been arranged to meet the needs of those students who desire to be given credit for all work done here in a law school and also for those who desire to take law simply to have a knowledge of it with no idea of using it in a professional way. The classes will meet twice each week and three hours credit will be given.

Hesperian Literary society adjourned Friday night to hear the annual debate between the Apollonian club and Pearsons Literary society.

At the last meeting of the Hesperian Literary society officers for the coming year were elected as follows: Jones, president; McKee, vice president; Lansing, secretary and treasurer; Hobson, sergeant-at-arms, and Greenfelder, censor.

Miss Anna Clough '[illegible] C. C. ex-'06, is visiting her friend, Miss Sara Wallace, in Glenwood Springs, Colo.

The Glee club concert was a great success in every way. The trip was a success financially and there is a small surplus which will be applied toward the expenses of a long spring vacation trip. Mr. Cobert, as the reader, made a big hit.

At the celebration supper of the Apollonian club Friday night several members of the alumni were present. "Chilly" Frost C. C. '01 was present and in a speech which he made to the members invited the debaters and their lady friends to be his guests at a dinner to be given in their honor at his home in the near future.

At the meeting of the Minerva Literary society Friday, Miss Margaret Mack of this city was elected to the office of president. Miss Mack is a junior and is the second member of the class to be honored with an office which is usually given to a senior.

In the opening adress of the joint debate Friday night, Professor Urdahl said that the event was the most important of the college year and that the time would come when to be a member of either debating team would be considered the greatest honor that could come to one while in college, not excepting a Phi Beta Kappa key.

James K. McClintock has resigned as general supervisor of spring athletics and William Lennox has been elected to fill the position.

Last Friday President Slocum gave the last ethical for the first semester. The theme of most of the ethicals has been on some phase of loyalty.

Many of the college and academy students are planning to see John Griffith in "King Richard the Third" next Wednesday evening. It is seldom that the Shakespearean plays visit this city and they are always well attended by the students, especially by those who have made a special study of his works. It is hoped that Mr. Griffith will be asked to speak at the college on the subject of the Shakespearean drama.

Arrangements are being made to have a joint debate with Denver university in the near future. The university will submit the question and the college will have choice of sides.

Red letter days for college men: Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 28, 29, and 30. Charles D. Hurrey will be here.

The Tiger this week contained a schedule for the second semester. This is the first time that the schedule has ever been published in the Tiger, and the students find it of great assistance in arranging their courses. A copy of the schedule was furnished by Professor Pattison.

Track spirit is already being aroused. A few new men of merit have expressed their intention of joining the squad which will begin training in the near future. The squad will be in charge of Ivory James.

This week's Tiger contained pictures of Donald McCreery, Roy Mack, Charles D. Hurrey and Miss Ethel Harrington.

RHEUMATISM FLESH SORE AND TENDER
MUSCLES DRAWN AND STIFF
EVERY JOINT A SEAT OF PAIN

There is no suffering so acute as that produced by Rheumatism, as those who have experienced its cutting pains, throbbing muscles and aching bones will testify.

Rheumatism is the result of a sour condition of the blood brought on through absorbing into this vital fluid the acids and poisons left in the system by poor bowel action, weak kidneys, stomach troubles, etc. The refuse or waste matter of the body, which nature intends shall be carried off, sours and forms uric acid and other irritating poisons, which the blood distributes to the different muscles, nerves, sheaths and bones, and Rheumatism, a demon of pain, takes possession of the system. The disease does not affect all alike. Some have it in the inflammatory form, manifested by a red, feverish condition of the skin, while the flesh becomes puffy, sore and tender to the slightest touch. With others the disease is muscular, the muscles becoming drawn and stiff, and while the pain is not so constant as that produced by the inflammatory form, the disease is really deeper seated, and because of the stiffened condition of the muscles and ligaments, is very inconvenient to the sufferer. But the worst form of the disease is known as Articular Rheumatism. The bones and joints become affected, and every movement sends excruciating pains shooting through the body, and where the acid poison is allowed to remain the joints become coated with chalk-like deposits, and as the disease progresses they often become locked and useless.

For over two years I suffered excruciating pains in the shoulders, caused by muscular rheumatism. I kept using liniments all the time, but the pains continued to increase. Finally I decided to try S. S. S., and after using several bottles had no more pain. To make sure, however, I continued to use your Medicine for a little after all symptoms of the disease had disappeared. Although this was twelve years ago, I have never been troubled since.
200 Liberty Street, Hopkinsville, Ky. C. E. WEST.

When Rheumatism becomes intrenched in the system it so completely dominates it that the sufferer's life is almost literally controlled by the disease. Cold and dampness being exciting causes they must govern their every action with regard to the condition of the weather, confining themselves to the house, knowing that the least exposure will bring on an attack. Indigestion is another predisposing cause, and fearing the pain and discomfort sufferers often try to avoid it by depriving themselves of those articles of diet of which they are most fond. A great many people have an idea that because sudden changes in the weather or imprudence of the appetite bring on an attack of Rheumatism that it is a disease which is easily controlled. So when a spell comes on they begin to use plasters, liniments, lotions, etc., expecting to drive out the pain and inflammation, and thus cure the disease. This treatment is all right to ease the pain and make the sufferer more comfortable, but can never cure Rheumatism, nor prevent its return, because it does not reach the real cause of the trouble, which is in the blood.

When neglected or improperly treated Rheumatism always becomes chronic and does not depend upon climatic conditions to bring on an attack, but remains a constant and unwelcome companion. The proper treatment for Rheumatism is S. S. S. This great remedy cleanses the circulation of all acids and irritating poisons, builds up thin, sour blood and permanently cures this painful and distressing disease. S. S. S. possesses solvent properties which dissolve and filter out the salts and deposits, and so enriches the blood that a fresh, healthy stream is carried to all parts of the body. Then the pains and aches cease, the flesh becomes firm and loses that tender, sensitive feeling, the joints all work smoothly again, and complete health is restored. S. S. S. is the treatment for Rheumatism in every form, for whether your case is acute or chronic the cure must come through the blood. Book on Rheumatism and any medical advice desired furnished without charge.

CRANE-JEFFREYS ENGAGEMENT

The coming revival of "She Stoops to Conquer," with William H. Crane and Miss Ellis Jeffreys as co-stars, which is to be made at the Opera house Tuesday evening, promises to be an event of unusually interesting importance. Goldsmith's old comedy is always a delight when adequately presented, and that it will receive justice at the hands of the players entrusted with its present revival seems to go without the saying. To bring about the revival with its extremely strong cast necessitated two sets of combinations—that of Charles Frohman and the firm of Liebler & Company, and that of the American comedian and the English actress. There were other combinations in the completion of the company, but the above are the main ones without which the revival could never have occurred. The idea of reviving the company was first broached three years ago. At that time it looked as if any arrangement bringing Mr. Crane and Miss Jeffreys into the company was an impossibility, for both were stars and both were capable of standing alone. Mr. Crane, however, liked the idea of the revival, and he thought more of it after he had seen one of Miss Jeffreys' performances and realized that all that had been said of her abroad was true. The time seemed ripe for the revival this season, and the idea soon became a concrete fact. During the days of the Robson and Crane partnership one of their big revivals was of "She Stoops to Conquer," and pronounced was its success that it ran all of one season. In the revival at that time Mr. Crane played the part of Hardcastle, which part, by the way, he is to portray in the present revival, and Mr. Robson played the part of Tony Lumpkin, which now falls into the hands of that clever English actor, George Giddens. Miss Jeffreys is to be seen as Miss Hardcastle, a role in which she has won lavish commendation in England, where she is one of the most prominent figures in the theatrical world. The mounting of the old comedy is on a lavish scale, and the revival in its entirety is an honest effort to give the public something that is not only worth while, but which will be long and pleasantly remembered by all those who witness it.

Miss Ellis Jeffreys.

Though Miss Ellis Jeffreys, the noted English actress, who is the co-star with William H. Crane in "She Stoops to Conquer" for the present season, does not wear very elaborate gowns in this charming comedy of Goldsmith's, she is credited with having in her wardrobe some of the most beautiful and costly creations of the dressmaker's art, the designer of most of them being Madame Heywood, the court dressmaker of London, England. Madame Heywood is an authority on gowns, and most of the American women who are fortunate enough to be presented at court, depend on her artistic judgment for their costumes, the designs of which are always original and in elegant taste.

Miss Jeffreys is one of the noted beauties of the British isles, and is accounted the best dressed woman on the English stage. She is a sister-in-law of Lord Curzon, ex-viceroy of India, having married Fred Curzon, a younger brother, and is a member of the exclusive social set of London.

The accompanying beautiful gown is a sister robe of apricot pink chiffon velvet, exquisitely embroidered in tea roses, pale green, gold and silver. There is a draped girdle of soft apricot liberty satin, the girdle being caught under the band in the back. The magnificent wrap is of apricot chiffon cloth, trimmed in bands of sable.

"UNDER SOUTHERN SKIES."

Lottie Blair Parker, author of "Way Down East" and "Under Southern Skies" and "David Corson," has a happy faculty in character drawing that is possessed by few dramatic writers of the present day. Especially is this true of her beautiful play of the south, "Under Southern Skies," that will be presented here on next Saturday evening at the Opera house. The fineness of her characterizations, in minuteness and fidelity to detail, will be easily recognizable to anyone at all familiar with plantation life in the south. Charles Hoey, also of southern birth, will sing old-time darky melodies.

The Juggling Thorns, in modern juggling and feats of strength, and Fields & Mason, in character changes, are also billed to appear.

Mr. Robert Ellis will sing a patriotic ballad entitled, "Dear Old Dixie."

The moving picture film shows an author's dream and is said to be full of good comedy.

SCENE FROM FIRST ACT IN "UNDER SOUTHERN SKIES" AT THE OPERA HOUSE NEXT SATURDAY EVENING.

JAMES O'NEILL IN "MONTE CRISTO."

There are perhaps three or four actors in the history of the American stage whose names will always be indelibly associated with the characters they have made famous; Booth as "Hamlet," Mary Anderson as "Juliet," Joseph Jefferson as "Rip Van Winkle," and James O'Neill as "Monte Cristo." No matter who should play these parts, they would always be compared unfavorably to these eminent players, who through a lifetime of success have made these characters peculiarly their own. Mr. O'Neill has enacted the role of Edmond Dantes more time than Jefferson did "Rip." But repetition has not wearied him of his role nor time taken the edge from his fine, artistic temperament. His performance is as fresh and virile as when he was making his reputation, while yet it is mellowed and dignified by the consummation of the powers of a great actor. To the theatergoers of the country he is the ideal conception of Dumas' hero. For years Mr. O'Neill has tried to shelve the play, and he has made many elaborate productions of new plays, but the demands of the public and theatrical managers have been like the "Call of the Wild," and he has been compelled to return to "Monte Cristo." When Mr. O'Neill appears at the Opera house on February 1, it will very probably be for the last time he will ever be seen as Edmond Dantes, for he contemplates shelving "Monte Cristo" after this season. A new and elaborate production and a strong company emphasize in a fitting way the end of "Monte Cristo," for when Mr. O'Neill gives up playing Edmond Dantes the play will die a natural death.

SHAKESPEARE'S "KING RICHARD THE THIRD."

This tragedy of the immortal bard is promised a splendid representation at the Opera house on Wednesday evening by John Griffith and a specially selected company. An interesting reminiscence of Shakespeare exists in an old churchyard at Petersburg, Va. There is still decipherable on a crumbling tombstone the epitaph of a "Professor of Chirurgery," of 1811, or thereabouts, at the foot of which is inscribed "One of the Pall-bearers of William Shakespeare of Avon," who it is evident, emigrated to Virginia in those early days and accounted it an honor to be recorded after death as one of the great author's pall-bearers, whose works are today too seldom represented. At the present time there is probably no actor on the American or any stage so eminently fitted as John Griffith for "King Richard," and this opinion has been heartily indorsed by the leading journals of America during his successful tours. Fireproof scenery for the entire production is carried, and electrical effects are introduced to enhance the weird effects and apparitions in the tent and battle scenes at Bosworth Field.

No play has called forth a greater variety of opinions than this. It has been characterized on the one hand as "the grandest conception of human genius" and on the other the learned Dr. Johnson says "it has no nice discriminations of character." Another gifted writer of the past says "the play has the power to charm and bewitch every audience from the time of its first presentation, about the end of the Sixteenth century, up to this day—a period of over 300 years—it has been a leading subject of thought and discussion among the world's greatest minds, and the greatest actors the world has produced within that time have gloried in giving performances of this rugged, forceful, dominant and majestic character. It is the greatest work of the great master of literature—the immortal Shakespeare—and the announcement of its performance will interest the best minds of any community and attract immense audiences of scholars, critics and lovers of the best the theater can possibly offer.

WILL APPEAR AT THE OPERA HOUSE IN "KING RICHARD THE THIRD" ON NEXT WEDNESDAY EVENING.

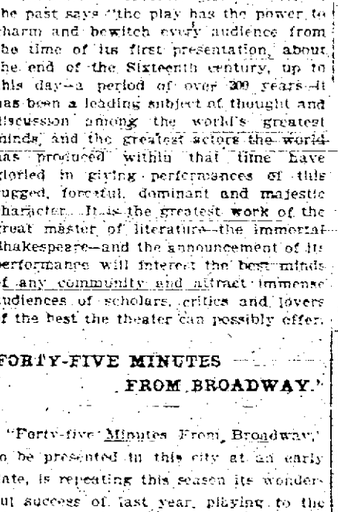

FORTY-FIVE MINUTES FROM BROADWAY.

"Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," to be presented in this city at an early date, is repeating this season its wonderful success of last year, playing to the utmost capacity of every theater fortunate enough to secure this attraction. It is generally regarded as the most clever and best written music play that has yet emanated from the prolific pen of George M. Cohan, who is now responsible for six very successful comedies. The company to be seen here will be headed by that graceful and magnetic little actress, Corinne.

Klaw & Erlanger, the managers of the tour, promise a notable cast of players, and one of the most elaborate productions ever sent on tour.

RETURN OF THE FAVORITES.

The Empire announces the return of Williams, Thompson & Hoey in a comedy sketch entitled, "The Telephone."

"JIM" THOMPSON of Williams, Thompson and Hoey, at the Empire.

This trio played the Empire seven successive weeks last summer and became pronounced favorites here. Jim Thompson, of this trio, is considered by many competent judges to be the best blackface comedian in this or any other country. His impersonation of the lazy, shiftless Southern negro, whose eyes become as large and round as individual butter dishes at the mere mention of a ghost, is truly amusing. Thompson was born and reared in southern Texas and negro sayings and mannerisms are a part of him. John Williams and

AFFAIRS musical, considerably interested the social world during the past week. The Wagner program given Monday evening in Perkins hall under the auspices of the Colorado Springs Musical club, contained some most attractive numbers that were warmly received by the large and appreciative audience. The net proceeds, $25, will be a welcome addition to the club treasury.

A warm reception awaited the Colorado College Glee and Mandolin club upon its appearance Thursday evening and enthusiasm prevailed until the last selection. The variety and excellent quality of the music interpreted was gratifying to every patron of the concert. The readings of Mr. Cobert contributed much to the success of the evening and the obliging alacrity with which the participants responded to encores was most refreshing.

COCKTAIL THAT CAME HIGH.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

A well-know promoter was invited by a friend to have a cocktail before dinner the other night at the Waldorf.

"Cocktail?" snorted the promoter indignantly. "Did I hear you say cocktail? Don't use that word when you talk to me if you wish to remain my friend. Cocktail? Do you think I'm Rockefeller?"

"No, but—"

"Did you have a notion that I hold it a disgrace to die rich? Well, if you do, don't. I can't afford to pay a million and a half for a cocktail oftener than once a month, and that's what one of those devil mixtures cost me last week. Yes, Bill, $1,500,000. Explain? Cert! The other day I was here in this same identical cafe talking business with a party of men from Canada who had a mine to float. I listened to their story, and as they had been vouched for by friends whom I trust and besides which I wasn't separating myself from 5 cents, I believed them. I told them I'd turn the trick for them. They wanted only about $750,000 for it. I became quite enthusiastic as I thought of the fat and juicy curb market in our midst, and I suggested a 600,000 share company, par value of same $5 each.

"Those blooming Canucks demurred at this. They said they didn't want any water in theirs and asserted that 300,000 shares at five bucks per was ample in their estimation. Did you ever? I stuck out for 600,000—it was only $3,000,000—but they insisted that 300,000 shares were enough. There was a deadlock, and I suggested cocktails. I ordered them. It was not my first drink, and it made me feel so good natured that I gave in to them. That stock went in a week. I could have sold a billion shares, leave alone 300,000 the cocktail made me consent not to issue. Cocktails? Take one with a strong dash of prussic acid, will you?"

KETTLE THAT WON'T BOIL OVER.

From the Chicago Chronicle.

A novel hot water kettle which is guaranteed can not boil over under any circumstances embodies a steam chamber into which the water when it rises in violent ebullition is made to pass through slots and then to fall back into the main body of the kettle. The spout comes from the steam chamber and is baffled and connected only indirectly. The steam chest of this kettle is utilized for cooking as well as providing pure boiling water for teamaking.

COURTESY IN SPAIN.

Travelers Get Best Idea While Traveling by Rail Third Class.

From the Atlantic Monthly.

The stranger can not perhaps more easily get a glimpse of the true and ancient Spain than by acquiring the habit of traveling third class. The seats, indeed, are hard, but the company is usually excellent, charming in its manners and not offensive in any sense. Here a constant series of novel pictures is presented to the traveler, who may quietly study them at leisure. Perhaps it is a dozen merry girls on their way to a festival, packed tightly together and laden with packages; some, the more sedate among them, wear mantillas, some bright handkerchiefs on their heads or go with hair uncovered, but however they are dressed, to whatever class they belong, they are all clean and sweet.

Or perhaps it is a less crowded carriage one enters; there are two middle-class Spaniards and a peasant group of three; a fat, jolly, middle-aged man in a peasant's costume, but clean and new, almost stylish; a woman of like age—one of those free, robust, kindly women whom Spain produces so often, and a pretty bareheaded girl, evidently her daughter, though the man seems a friend or relative who is escorting them on their journey. By and by, when we have been some hours on our journey, he lifts from the seat in front of him the large, heavy, embroidered wallet—the alforja, which Sancho Panza was always so anxious to keep well filled—unwinds it and draws out one of the great, flat, delicious Spanish loaves and throws it on the woman's lap.

Then a dish of stewed meat appears and the bread is cut into slices, which serve as plates for the meat. But before the meat is served the peasant turns round with a hearty "Gusta?" It is the invitation to share in the food which every polite Spaniard must make even to strangers who happen to be present, and it is, as a matter of course, politely refused: "Muchas gracias." Before long the black leather wine bottle is produced from the wallet and the meal proceeds.

At its final stage some kind of sweetmeat appears and small fragments are offered to the two middle-class Spaniards, and then—with a slight half movement, expressing a fine courtesy restrained by the fear of offering any offensive attention to the foreign caballero also. It is not improper to accept this time and now the leather bottle is handed round and the middle class Spaniards avail themselves of it, though with awkward unfamiliarity.

Some people have the "blues" worse than others. The kind of blues the young people have seem to be worse than any other kind.

The Passing of Indian Territory

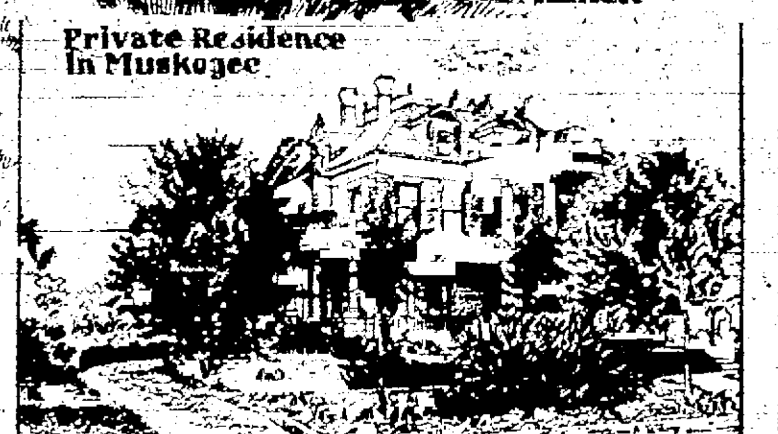

Oklahoma, the Newest Star In the Galaxy of States, Has Absorbed It

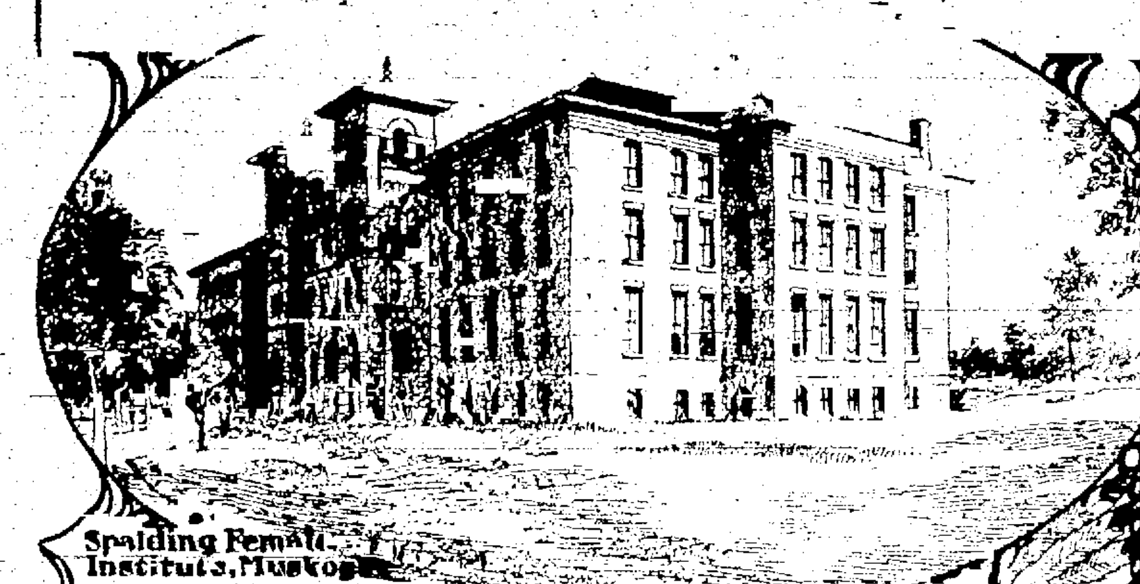

Street in Muskogee

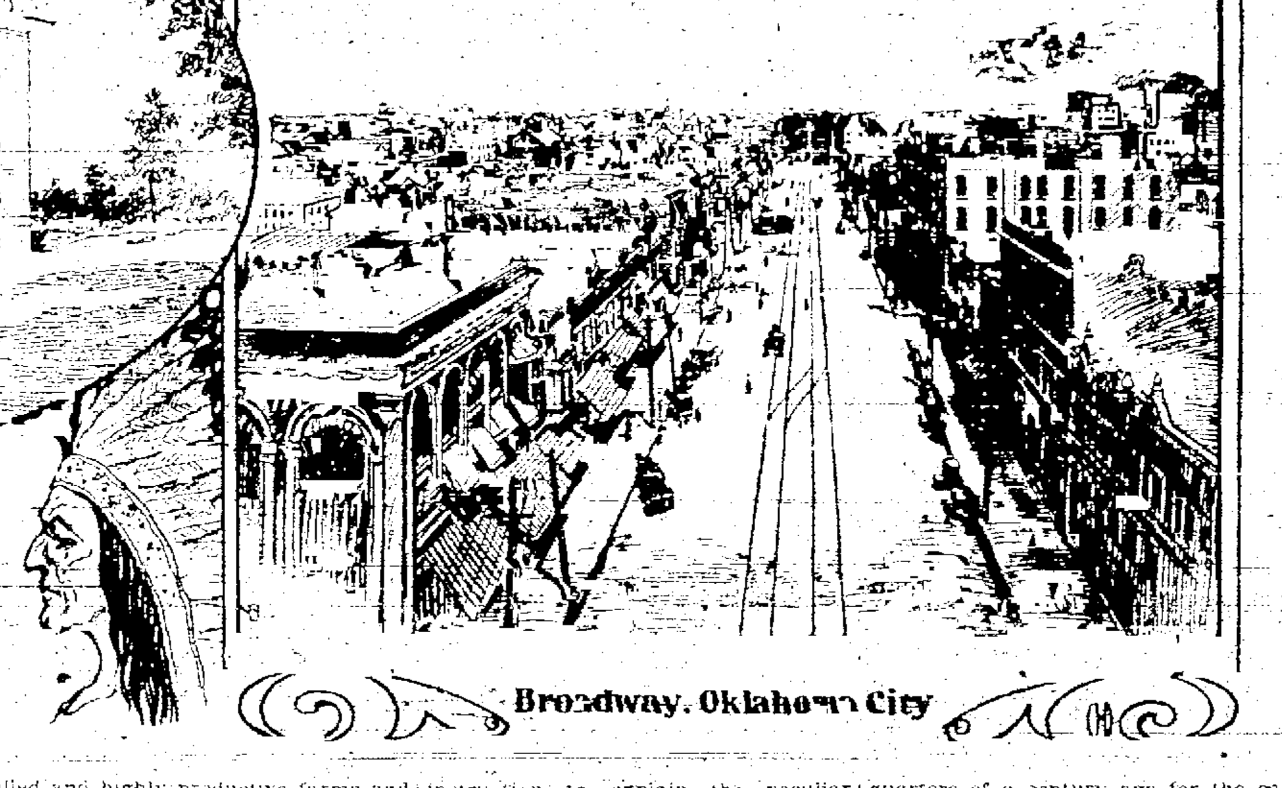

General Pleasant Porter

An Oklahoma Ranch

Private Residence In Muskogee

Spalding Female Institute, Muskogee

Broadway, Oklahoma City

THE making of the state of Oklahoma means the passing of Indian Territory. When President Roosevelt shall proclaim that Oklahoma is actually a state Indian Territory will be wiped off the map. By the act of congress admitting a state into the Union bearing the name Oklahoma the two sections known as Indian Territory and the territory of Oklahoma were combined. Indian Territory, which formerly included most of the area of the territory of Oklahoma, never was a territory in the sense in which that term ordinarily is applied to a section of country belonging to the United States. It occupied a unique position in its legal and governmental aspects. It stood alone. There never was in the world another large section of country occupying such a curiously interesting position.

The Oklahoma constitutional convention is now in session at Guthrie, the capital of the territory, which will be also the capital of the new state until 1913 under the provisions of the act of admission. Delegates sit in this convention from both the territories. It is understood that the convention will finish its work by the end of January. Then the new state must vote on the constitution presented. Upon its adoption President Roosevelt will issue a proclamation to the effect that Oklahoma, having complied with all the requirements of the act of congress, is a full fledged state, the forty-sixth in the American Union. A governor and other state officers will be elected, five members of the national house of representatives will be chosen, and the first state legislature will elect two United States senators.

The area of the new state is about 70,000 square miles, the Indian Territory portion being a few thousand square miles less than the western section, or the territory of Oklahoma. The population is estimated at a million and a half, Indian Territory furnishing perhaps a small majority of the people. Already a high degree of civilization has been attained by both sections of the state, so that Oklahoma steps upon the stage of statehood and makes her bow to her forty-five sisters as the latest graduate in the group, averaging in all branches well up toward the front. She has thriving cities with all up to date improvements, colleges and a thorough public school system, hundreds of churches and newspapers, thousands of well tilled and highly productive farms and a population of intelligent citizens recruited from practically every state in the Union.

In addition there is a native population which is the most interesting of all. This is made up of the Indians who now become citizens of the United States, eligible to the township constabulary or the presidency of the republic. Most of the Indians live in the Indian Territory end of the new state. There are about 100,000 of them. Comparatively few of them, however, are full blood Indians. Some of them are white people and others are negroes. All are classed as Indians because they are "citizens" of the nations of the Five Civilized Tribes. It would require a diagram and a year's instruction to explain the peculiar status of these Indian citizens under the regime that is now passing away. A Philadelphia lawyer, popularly presumed to be able to untangle all twists and solve all puzzles, would meet his Waterloo here. The Dawes commission appointed to do the untangling, has worked twelve years at the job, most of the time under the active supervision of Hon. Tams Bixby, the acting chairman until the death of Senator Dawes, when he became chairman. Mr. Bixby is now commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, winding up the work. Muskogee, the largest city in Indian Territory, has been the headquarters of the commission.

Indian Territory was set aside three-quarters of a century ago for the occupancy of the Five Civilized Tribes and a few Indians of other tribes. The five tribes are the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws and Seminoles. They were driven from their native country in the states of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The United States government herded them in Indian Territory, which at the time was supposed to be a barren tract on the outskirts of the mythical Great American desert, not fit for the habitation of white men, but good enough for Indians. As a matter of fact, it is one of the most fertile and habitable regions on the globe.

The tribes settled in the wilderness of the territory and built up a civilization such as has existed nowhere else. Each tribe occupied its own section of the territory, establishing what was known as its nation. Thus we have the Cherokee nation, the Creek nation and so on. Each nation had its capital and its legislature and elected its governor or principal chief. The legislatures were modeled after those of the states. In the Creek legislature, for instance, the upper and lower houses were called respectively the house of kings and the house of warriors. Every king, however, was only a commoner. By the same token every warrior was a peaceful citizen. All lands were held in common. It was a modern Utopia, a new world communism; but, like most Utopias, it was not a perfect state of being. The Indians had troubles of their own. Over and above all was the great white father at Washington, who in relation to these five little nations and their people was practically a king.

The white man's advance continued irresistibly. White people poured into the five nations. They could not own lands there, but they could occupy lands, paying rent to the Indian nations when necessary, and helping themselves to the use of the land when they felt so inclined and could do so without trouble to themselves.

In 1889 the first large tract of land toward the western end of the big territory was opened to settlement under the homestead laws, and the territory of Oklahoma was created. This land was west of the five nations, which still remained under the old regime. Later several other large tracts were opened to settlement and added to Oklahoma, including the great Cherokee Strip and that remarkable region which used to be called "No Man's Land," because its status seemed to be such as to place it outside the pale of civilization, and about the only attention paid to it by Uncle Sam was to exercise, passively, the right of eminent domain. Thus was created the territory of Oklahoma, while Indian Territory was made up only of the five nations and the small Quapaw reservation in the northeast corner.

In 1893 so many whites had gone into Indian Territory that things were in a terrible mess. Congress determined to allot the lands to the Indians in severalty, with ultimate statehood in view. The Dawes commission undertook this task. The first thing was to find the Indians. Any person having one sixty-fourth part of Indian blood was to be classed as a "citizen" entitled to allotment. Under certain conditions the white men who had married Indians were also to be approved as citizens. Then there were the emancipated slaves of the Indians, who also came in for allotments. The full bloods, who number only about 25,000 altogether, were of course to be citizens, but many of them resisted the allotment, preferring to continue holding the lands in common. Some of them took to the woods and the hills. The commissioners had to go out and hunt them up, twist their pedigrees out of them in some manner and compel them to accept their share of the highly valuable acreage. That was one of the most difficult parts of the job.

There are "Indians" in Indian Territory, now holding rich land, as white as any white person who may read these lines. There are Indian maidens with the peachiest complexions and the most glorious of raven tresses, and there are some blonds. But they are Indians—they have a trace of Indian blood. Happy men no whiter than they, though altogether white, have married many of these maidens and are living happily ever after, for, as a rule, the girls are highly educated, refined and pretty.

General Pleasant Porter, formerly governor of the Creek nation, is a typical "white" Indian. He is a Creek.

Muskogee, which is in the Creek nation, is the largest city in Indian Territory. It had about 5,000 people four years ago and now claims 23,000, which is said to be not an extravagant claim. The city has trolley lines, theaters, big hotels and many handsome homes. In "old Oklahoma" are Oklahoma City and Guthrie, each rapidly striding forward in population and importance, while many smaller cities are growing so fast that you can see them grow.

Aside from the unusual conditions incident to Indian Territory and its history, Oklahoma presents a most fascinating story of development. It is full of romance and thrill. Volumes might be written about it as interesting as any of the six best sellers of the week in fiction and far more deserving of public attention. The story of the "Neutral Strip," or "No Man's Land," already mentioned, which now forms Beaver county, in the extreme western projection of Oklahoma, has an unwritten history worthy of any romancer's pen. The facts alone could be woven into serial stories enough to supply the magazines for many months.

ROBERTUS LOVE.

George Bernard Shaw, Wit and Man of Letters

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW is one of the most thoroughly exploited men of the day, and it is a reflection on one's capacity for keeping up with the times not to know something of him. One of the most interesting things about him is the method by which he has achieved so great notoriety in so short a time.

Of course there are various well authenticated ways of doing it. Homicide and the long and elaborate intermezzo between the act itself and administration of retributive justice afford a certain and rather popular means of securing publicity. Suicide is equally potent, but it has one capital drawback—he who is most concerned is debarred from the full enjoyment of the sensation. Happily for the born egotist, there are abundant other less extreme resources. If he is clever enough, he is pretty likely to find a vehicle suitable to his purpose.

Shaw has found that medium. By means of it he has attracted the attention of the English speaking world, particularly America. There are Americans—not so many English, perhaps—who believe him to be the nearest approach to genius of the time. There are others, plenty of them, who regard him as an arrant charlatan. Fortunately for Mr. Shaw both views are valuable, and almost equally so, in obtaining for him that which he seeks so palpably.

Egotism has an unpleasant sound, but it really isn't so always. It is only intolerable in the ignorant and vulgar. In the hands of the capable and clever it may be made thoroughly enjoyable and even profitable. The egotism of George Bernard Shaw is transcendent and all pervading, but it is never commonplace. It is the inspiration of a man possessed of a surfeit of cleverness and an unquenchable desire to exploit it.

A few years ago, when Mr. Shaw was just beginning to attract attention, it occurred to him that it would be a novel thing to define himself precisely as if the word "Shaw" were a common noun in its correct alphabetical position in the dictionary. This was the outcome: "A bachelor, an Irishman, a vegetarian, an atheist, a teetotaler, a fanatic, a humorist, a fluent liar, a social democrat, a lecturer and debater, a lover of music, a fierce opponent of the present status of women and an insister on the serious in art."

It might have been a good definition for Shaw as he understood himself at the time, but it would be wide of the mark at present. It would have to be expanded in some directions and curtailed in others. Since then he has become a Benedict, a successful playwright and a man of affairs, "the victim of a bank account," as he asserts humorously.

Shaw was born in Dublin fifty years ago. He does not seem inclined to speak of his early life except to deny almost everything that has been said of it by others. He admits that he made up his mind at a very early age to earn his living by the pen and that nine years' effort brought him about $30, most of it a prize for a patent medicine advertisement. At the age of twenty he concluded that starvation in London was no more to be dreaded than the same fate at home and was likely to be less monotonous, so he migrated to English soil, his combined resources consisting of an "itch for scribbling that was incurable" and "a capacity for abstinence that would have been a delight to Francis d'Assisi."

He was at that time the author of no less than five novels, no one of which had ever seen the light. He took a humble lodging, his Irish plausibility enabling him to secure a week's credit, and proceeded to let loose the "torrent of ideas that was seething within." Armed with a pocketful of sketches, he made a tour of the newspaper offices without lodging a sheet. At one of them, however, he was given to understand that his work would receive consideration if the conditions were fulfilled.

The young Irishman took the hint and after making a study of the "policy" of the paper submitted another batch of sketches. One of them was accepted, and the overjoyed author was the richer by a crown. It was the entering wedge, and it gave him a foothold. In the course of time he found favor in other literary quarters and established a "connection" which, precarious as it was, made living a possibility to one of his abstemious habits.

Even at this early period of his career he was an ardent vegetarian and had begun to indulge in little affectations that served to mark him as an "original." In matters of dress he assumed the widest latitude. That any garment was fashioned in the prevailing style was sufficient to obtain his condemnation for it. Starched linen and polished boots were as obnoxious to him as is the chimney pot hat in Whitechapel. He went about in the garb of a workman out of employment, wearing coarse flannel shirts with wide, rolling collars and a slouch hat that overtopped a bushy head of hair and a lean face decorated with red whiskers.

Such was George Bernard Shaw in those early days. There was, perhaps, not another man in London who could flourish on so small a capital. His physical requirements were so few that they occasioned him no worry, and all of his effort could be directed toward the business of making himself known. He was absolutely without any of the trivial vices of men of his kind—tobacco, he maintained, was Satan's most potent ally, and the use of flesh was distinctively cannibalistic.

He was an extreme socialist. That enabled him to mount a box in Hyde park on Sundays and holidays and harangue the crowd. His unkempt appearance and his extravagant language attracted considerable attention, and the more the better—for George Bernard Shaw. He thus became an easy speaker and later on began to deliver lectures on a variety of subjects whenever and wherever he could secure a hearing.

This was his life for twenty-two years. At the end of that period he really had little to show for all his effort. He had achieved a certain amount of popularity, no doubt, but it was of the kind that is least of all satisfying to its owner. He had created a market for his literary wares and had become the mouthpiece of those who make it their crowning virtue to decry modern ways of doing. His apostolate was not of his own choosing, but was composed of those of all classes who see no merit in things as they exist. Himself a man of wit and creative talent, he must have despised the puny logic of those who professed to be his disciples.

At the age of forty-two, and for the first time on record, Shaw lapsed into conventionality and was legally wedded to a woman who knew him and his ways and was prepared to cope with them. He had spent twenty years of his life in inveighing against matrimony as it is practiced by civilized mankind, and the news of his Darby and Joan marriage came like a shock to those who had enrolled themselves as his followers. Dire consequences were predicted, but they have not come. On the contrary, there is every indication that marriage has done great things for the eccentric and would be iconoclastic Irishman. The eight years of his married life have brought him greater prosperity than he had ever known, and domesticity has added greatly to his popularity. His literary output has not become markedly less erratic, but its market value has expanded immensely.

The Shaws live at the top of a big old fashioned house which stands only a few hundred yards from the bustling Strand. The building dates back to the French revolution, and there is nothing modern looking about its exterior. On the lower floors are the premises of the New Reform club, in which Mr. Shaw is greatly interested. From the club rooms a winding stairway leads up to the Shaw menage, and halfway up this ascent is a little wooden gate such as is used to prevent small children from falling downstairs. On this gate is a plate which bears the legend: "Mrs. Bernard Shaw. Please Ring." A ring brings a trim servant, who unlocks the gate and ushers the visitor into a great drawing room that looks out through three big windows over the Thames embankment.

The room is charming, and so are its contents, and so also are the Shaws when they make their appearance. Mrs. Shaw is a pleasant faced matron, with a constant and highly specialized knack of bearing the burden of the conversation when her husband is present. Shaw himself is a tall, thin man, straight in body and quick of movement. He wears a red beard, straggling and flecked with white and has big and very white teeth, which are quite prominent. He is no longer conspicuously unconventional in his attire, but still retains certain peculiarities of dress.

Shaw is unique as a talker. He is unmistakably of the sort that needs no drawing out. One has only to suggest a topic, and Shaw does the rest. He talks rapidly and with a slight brogue, and he never hesitates for a word or an illustration. He talks so fluently and so well that it seems almost as if he were delivering a carefully prepared lecture. What he says, too, is entirely worth while.

Mr. Shaw is not partial to the press, and although he is exceedingly gracious to American visitors it is understood that he does not approve of America as a whole. Some of his plays have made a great deal of money on this side of the water, but he has never become reconciled to the fate of "Mrs. Warren's Profession," which he declares to have been the victim of "Comstockery."

Among Men who Work with Hand or Brain

Success Must Be Paid For; Figure the Time and Cost.

By M. M. Atwater.

"SUCCESS, n things depends on ... age ... and ...

"The man ... must ... ascertain the possible cost beforehand, the days, months and years it may take him to make his goal, no matter what goes ahead, while the man doomed to failure says, 'I can't' and stops short.

When Dr. Lyman Beecher, after preaching a very powerful sermon ... was asked how long the sermon was spent in preparing, he replied ... "About forty years."

That remark was made in a past century when the short cuts to success, the patent ... methods of education taken in tabloid form ... were not so advanced as now:

BECOME A CARTOONIST. QUALIFY AT home during spare time to earn at least $25 a week ... men like Gibson ... Briggs ... McCutcheon and many others earn fortunes.

Short Spurts Do Not Win.

The young bank clerk, the young bookkeeper, and the high school boy see this ad ... to sketch monstrosities and dream of fortunes. While the mood is on they work ... three months give up in disgust because they stuff won't sell. They find out that the quick development of originality is an impossibility.

Credulity seems to be the spirit of the age. Hundreds of people are taken in each week by some such ad as this:

BE YOUR OWN BOSS—SEND FOR PAL ... Montgomery Ward & Co., Sears Roebuck & Co., and others have made fortunes. Why not YOU?

The hard worker grinding away at his daily task reads, believes, invests in an outfit, ... up to sell to ... and in a few months at most wakes up disillusioned.

Discontent Is Tenacity's Foe.

Now neither cartooning nor the mail order business is of itself an impossible path to success. I am only ... these as examples of the methods which are used to ... the ... into a belief that success can be a thing of the moment, an easy thing, waiting like a pigeon ready roasted to drop into the mouth opened to receive it.

"Why work for $3.50 a week," says the incompetent maid, "when Annie gets $8 a week just for the cooking?"

So it goes, the worker never stopping to think that there is a reason why one man is more successful than another—the inexorable law of the business universe that a man ... get as much as he is worth, and no more.

The youth who gets $65 a month and is to be raised to $75 after the first, by hard work has kept himself in such perfect practice that he can add two and three columns of figures and ...

Sticking to It Wins.

Success is a coy maiden, and is to be won ... by much wooing. She is a Rachel that must be served for.

Recently a young woman came to Chicago to get work. She applied to friends for assistance. They did their best to help her, and she visited around among them while soliciting work. Perhaps the young woman was too clever. She had been a bookkeeper ... was willing to begin as a stenographer at $15 a week, and possibly would take a position as housekeeper at $10 a week ... three servants were kept. It was a case of inflated value. The girl was honest. She said she really couldn't live on any figures less than she had stipulated, and so after being a guest of charity she took back to her country town home the stunning business costumes she had made to astonish Chicago—and said: "There is no work to be found there."

Yet I happen to know the case of another young woman who went downtown armed with ... skill ... for ... work, and curtly was asked by the ... manager she accosted:

"How much have you been getting?"

"Ten a week, sir."

"Well, if you'll take off your jacket and begin now we'll make it $12."

There was a difference in the women which was apparent to the keen business eye.

Ward Work Wins Distinction.

"I would not," said one manufacturer, "exchange my workers for Blank's with $1,000 to boot."

There is but one way of attaining excellence, and that is hard work, and a man ... pay the price for distinction.

A student once went to President Fairchild of Oberlin college and complained that the college course was entirely too long. "One ought to be able to get through in less time," persisted he. "Yes, perhaps you ought," replied President Fairchild in his calm benevolent way. "It takes less time to grow a squash than an oak tree."

It took Howe a whole year's experimenting to discover the principle of using two threads and making a stitch with a shuttle ... and then another whole year before he could construct a machine of steel and iron that would sew a seam. Ordinary folks can hardly conceive the immense difficulties in the paths of inventors.

Two generations of McCormicks worked on the reaper. The father's effort was a seeming failure ... but furnished a germ of thought that the son brought to fruition ... years after turning out a machine, every part of which was made by his own hands, spent nine years in proving it before putting it on the market.

Ten Years on One Job.

It took ten years to ... Troy, and it took ten years to satisfy young McCormick that the reaper was worthy to be sold. "I was sometimes flattered," said he, "and at other times discouraged, and at all times deemed it best not to attempt the sale of a machine until satisfied that the reaper would succeed."

Here was a man who was not afraid to pay the price to win name and fame.

There are people who always are beginners, because they switch back and forth from one track to another. They do not hold to the task they set themselves. The bulldog grip is what does it.

"I am for permanence in all things," says Carlyle, "at the earliest possible moment and to the last possible. Blessed is he that continueth where he is. Here let us rest and lay out our seedfields; here let us learn to dwell. Here, even here, the orchards that we plant will yield us fruit; the acorns will be wood and pleasant umbrage if we wait. Not a difficulty but can transform itself into a triumph. O unwise mortals that forever change and shift and say, Yonder, not here! Wealth richer than both the Indies lies everywhere for man, if he will endure. Vagrant Sam Slicks who rove over the earth doing strokes of trade, what wealth have they?"

Why Retail Stores Fail; Snags That Trip Merchants.

By George Brett.

IT is as true of business as seamanship that unless a man is posted exactly on what hidden dangers lie in the path of his craft the more are he will go under.

The retailer learns in the hard, rugged school of experience, but nevertheless he can learn much from the mistakes of others at much less cost. The following words taken from Bradstreet's Journal for Jan. 20, 1906, will bear careful study.

Those who are disposed to learn from the experiences of others who have tried and failed to make a success in business life will find considerable value in the analysis of business failures, their causes, etc.

A study of the causes of bankruptcy—that morgue into which the corpses of those killed in the battle for commercial existence find their way—is instructive.

Lack of Capital Ruins Many.

At the top of the list is lack of capital. This alone is held responsible for one-third of the failures in the country. Incompetence is held accountable for nearly one-fourth of the commercial deaths. Specific conditions (disaster, etc.) cause but 10 per cent of traders to go under. Competition as an assigned cause of failure has been less marked than for a decade past. Below are the figures for last year, taken from Bradstreet's record:

Lack of capital	33.4	Unwise credits	3.1
Incompetence	24.4	Neglect	.8
Specific conditions (disaster, etc.)	16.3	Failures of others	2.2
Fraud	9.2	Competition	1.5
Inexperience	4.8	Extravagance	1.1

The retail storekeeper often feels himself at a disadvantage when he is located in a town of some few thousand inhabitants. He regards himself as isolated and cut off as it were from the great outside world of action.

Hard to Keep Up to Date.

There is some excuse for this feeling. He lives in an atmosphere of greater conservatism than that which obtains in large cities, and it doubtless is hard to keep abreast of the times when you are forced continually to be educating the community into the advantages of paying spot cash instead of getting goods on credit. Further, many people in the country are too much in love with low prices, regardless of quality, and the store keeper, to make a success, has to combat this error.

Yet the fact remains that the smallest retailer in the smallest town is just as much a merchant as is the biggest storekeeper in Chicago or New York.

The salesman, or drummer, generally is the connecting link between the retailer and the world of wholesale business. The house in Chicago, New York or St. Louis which the salesman represents is impersonal to a great extent. The credit man views him mainly through spectacles of various hues furnished from time to time by commercial agencies in the shape of reports ... But the drummer looms large on his horizon as something tangible and human—a man to whom he can confide his opinions and troubles and learn what is passing in the upper ... of his particular business in the big cities.

... to say that there is not a single country store which does not suffer a loss of 1 to 5 per cent of its business in this way.

Too Free with Credit.

The large stores in Chicago soon would be put out of business if they traded on the hit or miss principles of many small concerns.

As statistics show, quite a number of failures are caused through extending too much credit to customers. But there is no computing what an infinite source of annoyance and vexation the credit system is to the country storekeeper.

Inability to get his money means inability to buy fresh stock frequently and means consequent loss to him. The writer was told ... that one hardware merchant situated in a town of about 3,000 people had no less than 400 accounts on his books. One customer owed $.25, another $100. "If I could get all this money outstanding I'd retire from business," said the store keeper sorrowfully.

The manager of the country trade credit department of one of the biggest wholesale houses in the world, speaking on the matter of failures among retailers in general, said:

"We have many thousands of cases of dealers who go under. Coming before our notice, and if I were asked to name the most prolific cause of disaster I would say it is want of ability in buying—either in attempting to do too large a business on too small a capital or buying too much stock.

Over-Stock Is Often Costly.

"In a lecture recently given before a college student body I stated that a business man now has as much need of training as a professional man. Yet hundreds of men embark in a retail business with but little knowledge of merchandise and are entirely ignorant of the first principles of successful trading, buying in the lowest market and selling in the highest.

"Buying too much stock largely comes under the caption of trading on an insufficient capital. If a man has a capital of $5,000 and invests that amount in merchandise and then gets another $5,000 worth on credit he is courting disaster, yet it sometimes occurs. It may be possible for a man with a capital of $5,000 to carry a stock of $7,500 and prosper in good times, but he has no reserve fund and is not safeguarding himself against emergencies.

"I remember the case of a man who had a capital of $10,000. Not deeming it enough he borrowed another $10,000 from a friend of his and gave a judgment note. Everything went well for a time. Business was good and prospects bright. Then a rumor—entirely unfounded—reached his friend that things were not well with the retailer. Immediately he required payment of the note and the $20,000 worth of merchandise was sold for $10,000 at a forced sale. The unfortunate man ... short time before ... $10,000 ... was left penniless.

Knowledge of Business Essential.

"It is hardly possible for a man to succeed in a business which he doesn't know, and he should not only know it thoroughly ... but should have some gift for management. The retailer to make money should ... a system of keeping track of his position all the time, ... to how many goods he needs to buy.

How to Interview Big Men; Rules for Asking Favors.

By Caroline S. Maddocks.

HOW and when to go to an interview with a man of large affairs needs to receive the most careful consideration of any applicant of whatever nature his business. There is in fact, almost a calendar of days for most business men—"Tuesday" ... calendar of weeks and months. But sometimes it is not possible to wait for the most favorable time or the year in which to approach a man, and so the problem arises as to what hour of the twenty-four is the best for the business on hand.

The consensus of experience seems to be that many men are most approachable soon after their lunch hour. A young man of experience in business explained that the great value of a certain fast train from Chicago to New York City was that it got a man to that metropolis shortly before luncheon, giving him time to brush up a bit, get something to eat himself and find his man in a mood to do business.

Morning Bad Time to Call.

An applicant for a favor which was really an extension of former benefits went to a certain head man in the middle of Monday forenoon and got a surprise in the way of a reception. "Didn't you know any better than that?" said a worldly wise friend. "What could you expect on Monday morning?"

"Not on Monday, but any morning is a bad season in which to intrude upon the time of a business man. The hours seem to be important for ... voluntarily to give up any part of the morning, especially the early part ... he does business at a desk; there are a great things there that demand his first attention. If he is superintendent ... he is found ... setting wheels in motion. The person who is rash enough to approach these men in the early part of the day runs the risk of being treated in what has been described as "that unfeeling way."

Applicant Must Know His Man.

Many men who set a time for an interview on something not directly connected with their business make the hour 3:30 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Many men begin to ease up on the work of the day at that time, but others are not in a pleasant mood by that hour if they have had a strenuous day. Those who have big talk to fry invite their man to dinner, and before they release him for the evening they usually have made progress.

Besides there are other things to be taken into consideration if one would escape an experience with ... that unfeeling way. The applicant must be sure he has an adequate and just request or business to present ... must be prepared to state his errand concisely.

There are men in ... who ... a generous hospitality. Often ... actual potentates are not courteous, and they choose to place guards ... for ... a legitimate reason, in ... case the manners of such are extremely offensive ... tone at the center of things reaching out to the horizon line of the establishment. The divinity that hedged kings of old could have been scarcely more formidable a barrier than that which protects free approach ... men of today ... there are times ... possible without an intermediary for one to walk right ... and up to the chief.

Rulers with No Intermediary.

Strangely enough it often is the real ... wonders ... the large ... to whom approach is easiest ... sure enough of their dignity ... they have ... enough to be natural ... their ... the fellow man.

And then there are the manners of favor seeking. The successful ... neither too humble nor too independent, too expectant ... beggar ... been known to walk by all signs ... clerks ... through ... offices without challenge ... before a high official and disarm ... initial courtesy by the way of introducing ... such ... quickly stated is the real thing that wins. The attack should be immediate.

Biggest Men Are Human.

No matter how unfeeling a man may be, no matter how cold he seems, he is human, and it is but necessary to touch that chord of his makeup to secure a favorable response or at least kindly treatment. And besides, a man is a man for a' that, whether he is on the outside or inside of the rail, and if he possesses and maintains a worthy dignity he is insured in most cases against any harsh treatment, always taking for granted that he is legitimately engaged, be he seeking work, patronage, endorsement, or favor of those who have these to give.

Railroad Laws of Many States Protect Operating Employes.

By George A. Russ.

FEDERAL and state legislative bodies have given much attention to the railroad man in recent years. In the early days of railroading the railroad man was left to look out for himself as best he could. The few laws were inadequate, as they seldom were constructed in the interest of the employe.

Today there is an altogether different story to tell through public sentiment and other causes. There is today no state in the union but has legislated to some extent in behalf of the railroad man.

A complete digest of the laws of this nature would occupy several volumes, but the laws which have a more or less direct bearing on the employment and protection of the railroad man may be briefly outlined.

The laws relating to the mechanical equipment of railway trains, tracks, etc., have been the means of reducing the fatalities of employes to injury to a minimum. In the old days, when the drop pin was used, no such thing was known as automatic couplers, air brakes, etc., but now the federal government demands that all trains be equipped with automatic couplers, power brakes, and other safety appliances. Grab irons are required on all box and flat cars. Telltales must be installed at bridges, viaducts, tunnels or any overhead structure. Frogs, switches and guard rails are required to be blocked.

Automatic Couplers.

Illinois, Connecticut, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska, New York, and Ohio have laws which require the use of automatic couplers on all trains operating within the respective states. Air or power brakes are a necessary appliance to all trains running within the borders of Delaware, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Rhode Island, Texas and Vermont.

Frogs, switches and guard rails are required to be blocked in Colorado, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, Rhode Island, Vermont, Washington and Wisconsin. Grab irons on box and flat cars are required in but two states, Indiana and Massachusetts. The last named state has the only law which regulates the height of drawbars on cars.

Bridge guards or telltales must be placed at the approaches of bridges, tunnels, etc., in the states of Connecticut, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New York, Vermont and Virginia. The height of bridges, wires, etc., over railway tracks is regulated in the states of Connecticut, Kentucky, Michigan, New Hampshire, Ohio, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Safety Switches in New York.

The law of the state of New York, which requires that safety switches be placed at frequent intervals on main line tracks, without doubt is a model piece of legislation and one which ought to be copied in every state and territory ...

These laws have been enacted for protection of life of railway employes. Besides these many laws have been passed which look to the health and rights of employes. Laws also have been enacted which tend to lighten the work of these men. The most noteworthy of the latter class are those regarding the number of men required to form a crew. In Ohio full crews—that is, five men—must accompany both freight and passenger trains. If by any cause a member of the crew is disabled, the train is required to stop over until the vacancy has been filled, when the trip can be finished.

Accidents Must Be Reported.

In South Carolina there must be at least one brakeman to every two cars on passenger trains, although when power brakes are used this is not necessary. That state also requires that there must be one brakeman on the last car of every freight train.

The laws of Arizona provide that on grades of over ninety-five feet to the mile on mountain ... brakeman for every 600 tons.

The laws of many states and also a federal law require that all accidents to employes or passengers must be reported to the railway commissions of the respective states or the interstate commerce commission.

In Alabama, Connecticut, Michigan, Mississippi, South Carolina and Vermont accidents must be reported to the railroad commissions of the respective states. The railway commission of Mississippi demands that accidents causing delay or injuries must be telegraphed immediately and a written report made afterward, both to be sent to the commission.

In South Carolina accidents causing injury to persons must be reported immediately to an accessible physician and notice given in writing to the railway commissioners within twenty-four hours. Until a few years ago the life of the average railroad man was one of almost slavery. A man would take his train out and double back with from two to five hours' rest, and this was an every day occurrence. By wise legislation this evil has been eliminated in a number of different states.

Limited Hours of Labor.

Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New York, Ohio, Texas and Arizona have laws limiting the hours a man must work on steam roads. As a matter of fact, those laws in most cases do not specify the number of hours a man shall work each day. Instead they prescribe the number of hours' rest that shall be allowed after a man has performed a certain amount of labor. In Colorado and Georgia ten hours' rest must be allowed after sixteen and thirteen hours of continuous service, in Florida after thirteen hours, Arizona and Minnesota after fourteen hours.

The employment of railroad labor also has been looked after by the various state bodies of lawmakers. Laws of this kind come under the head of employment and were enacted to secure the appointment of proper persons in positions of responsibility, as engineers, conductors, brakemen, train men, firemen, operators, etc. These laws are strict and must be lived up to, as the safety of travelers depends upon the men who are employed to carry them over the rails.

In Ohio conductors must have at least two years' experience as conductors or brakemen, engineers three years' experience, firemen and flagmen two years' experience as brakemen.

Examinations and Licenses.

Train dispatchers, firemen, flagmen, brakemen, trackmen and switch tenders ... required to undergo an examination are to be ... Alabama, ... Massachusetts and ... employes in positions which require them to distinguish form or color signals ... examined for color blindness or defective sight. Certificates of qualification ... In ... telegraph operators must be examined and obtain certificates of competency. In Colorado and New York persons who transmit orders for the movement of trains must be at least 18 years of age and have one ... experience as telegraph operator.

The states of Alabama, Massachusetts ... Ohio have laws requiring the examination of steam railroad employes.

In California and Michigan ... if an accident results or life or property is destroyed through the employment of persons in a state of intoxication ... them.

In Illinois, Michigan and Vermont employment as conductors, engineers of persons addicted to drinking intoxicating beverages is prohibited.

After all, the railroad man is not faring so badly at the hands of the lawmakers. Perhaps there is no class of labor which has been looked after as have those of the railroad.

Man of Fifty Still Good In Spite of Age Limits.

By J. M. Baldwin.

THE number of business houses and corporations that are putting into effect the age limit gradually is increasing. Some business firms refuse to keep a man in their employ beyond the age of 50.

Does it look as if we were a civilized nation when we are turning men out of employment at the age of 50? We let our thirst for money run at such a high rate that we must turn a man out of business when he is old.

In almost every city in the United States there are men going from place to place looking for a job only to be refused because they are 50 years old. The man who is at the head of a business does not cease work ... on his fiftieth birthday ... why does he not stop, why does he not give way to the younger man? There are many business men ... employes working under them ... the superiors who when they reach the age of 50 must step out of the harness. It has been said that it takes a man ... 50 years to learn how to succeed ... [illegible]

Roads Discharging Men Past 50.

Recently the Erie railroad enacted a law that no man be kept in their employ after he has reached the age of 50. In this instance ... has given his best years of ... the company and he becomes old and not so quick in his step, he is turned adrift. He can find a vocation elsewhere only by hard effort and possibly not at all. If he secures an engagement it is at low wages or at some work that is hard for him to do. He has perhaps worked at such wages ... a living and is a poor man, not being able to stand up for more wages, and when the age limit is reached he is turned out without any means in return for his prompt service.

What will be the result if such things are continued? It means that the younger ones of the family must take the responsibility of supporting the family. They must leave school, lose their education and become handicapped through life for the want of instruction. Thus may it easily be seen that such methods of business are bringing us closer and closer to child labor. The poor boy is crowded back to the place where he has no schooling simply because his father is old and is not able to support the family until he gets an education. The old man ... fully competent to discharge his duties ... he is 50.

Employes' Associations Do Much.

Each employe is taxed a small assessment of each month's wages to pay the pension of the employe who must retire from old age or ill health. This is made from the president down to the lowest salaried employe. Each one who is compelled to retire receives seventy per cent of his yearly wages, a pension, so long as he lives.

Why is it that all firms and corporations could not pension their employes when they reach the age limit or have ill health? Beyond any doubt this could be done. If this were the law all firms would wait until a man becomes too old to work or cannot, then he should be pensioned. There would not be a word said about the age of 50. Men would be growing valuable at that age.

The Thousand and One Trifles That Make for Perfection - Belts Assume New Importance The New Corset Lines - The Return of the Bustle No Longer a Rumor But an Accomplished Fact

The field of fashion never presented before such fascinating, but somewhat bewildering variety of styles, each one clashing with the other, but each one in just as good standing as its opponent.

Take for instance the shortwaisted Empire effects, and the longwaisted lines that characterize the Princesse modes. The one simply contradicts the other in line, in appearance in effect. And yet both are favored to an almost equal degree by the followers of fashion, whose preference are low for those somewhat lower in the social scale.

The corsetiere is a very important personage in the present scheme of things. One sees and reads advertisements of readymade [illegible] wherein it is declared that the such-and-so corset is admirably adapted to the Empire and Princesse gowns now so much in vogue. These are statements calculated to make the fastidious dresser weep, and are doubtless the cause of so many failures in the sartorial lines that are dubbed variously as Empire and Princesse gowns.

Any really good corsetiere whether she sells her own especial made-to-custom order-only corset, or vaunts the merits of a readymade brand will tell you that to wear either of [illegible] two warring modes successfully a special model corset is necessary. The Princesse gown cannot be successfully made and worn over an Empire mode corset and vice versa. For those favored few who can afford to patronize the high priced corset specialists, who make a separate model for each customer the matter presents little if indeed any difficulty. It is unlikely that two sets of corsets—one longwaisted the other shorter—are ordered where but one was ordered before.

But for the woman who depends upon the ready-to-wear corset saleswoman in her favorite shop, there are a few items of information to be gleaned about the trying situation.

But, first and foremost be sure that the saleswoman knows corsets. She may be an excellent saleswoman as a saleswoman and she may know what her firm keeps in stock but be sure that she knows [illegible] and understands figures and when you have found such a one grapple her to you and to your interests with hooks of steel. She is well worth paying court to—the successful corset saleswoman for she will add considerably worth to your appearance while saving you a like amount in expenditures.

Since the best houses all arrange to fit [illegible] the ready-to-wear at no [illegible] nowadays it is well to take advantage of this fact and have the corset fitted. In the ready made goods there is usually some little trifle that a skilled fitter can alter to the customer's advantage, and at a nominal cost. Unless you are absolutely stock size, that is, of the established regular commercial proportions, it is foolish to purchase and pay for a corset that has not been fitted to you personally. [illegible] emphasise is oftentimes lost sight of because those steels are placed a trifle too far forwards or back.

Certain lines of figure take certain lines of belt, and that as emphatically as that certain complexions and colorings take certain tints and are compelled to leave some others severely alone.

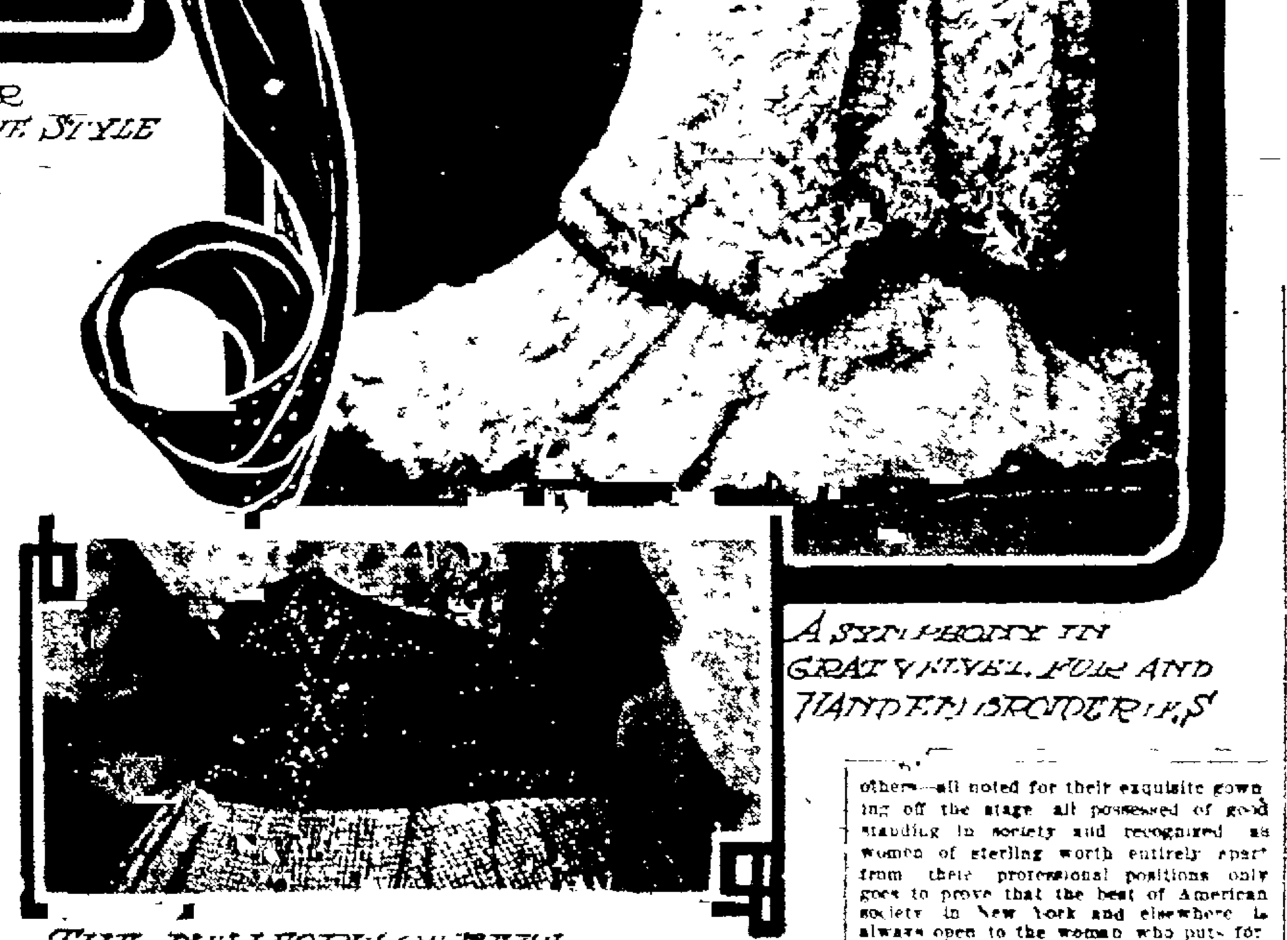

The waistline that is decreed the fashionable one at the moment is long and slender—we are speaking of belts, be it remembered, and not of empire or princess gowns, which do not require this adjunct—and to such a one almost anything in the line of belt, save and except the narrow half inch strap, is possible. Indeed for just this type of figure the corselet belt was invented. But there are few who can cut this with the elan and grace that it demands and as for finding it among the ready mades, that were a hopeless task.

Those elastic belts that are in such high esteem among clever dressers will solve the belt problem for many. Not that they are at all cheap, those foreign made ceintures, not at all. They come now in all colors, some of them exquisitely embroidered, others with Dresden and shadow printings that are really artistic, while still others are studded with cabochons of steel, jet and mock jewels. Perhaps the most flattering shape is that which represents a deep point both top and bottom at the back extending for several inches both above and below the waistline—the latter to a lesser extent however—and then slope gently around the sides to meet in a fancy clasp in the front that shall display but a few inches of surface. These cling to the figure delightfully, yield with its every motion, and best of all come in such a wide variety of color, size, shape and design that it is quite possible to gratify every conceivable taste.

The new corset models that are arriving daily from France and upon which the spring and summer output of our ready made articles will be modeled display [illegible] little differences from those that immediately preceded them. For one thing the hip line is a trifle more in evidence than it used to be and fashion is [illegible] not to be quite so strenuously crying "Hips in" as she used to do.

And there is not a single doubt of it, [illegible] the bustle has actually arrived. It is a small and unobtrusive affair at present, and is really [illegible] only to fill out such figures as sink below the waistline in the back. It is distinctly a corset accessory at present and an integral part of the garment for such figures. In its best presentations it is made of taffetas or a delicately tinted organdie. The usual half-circle outline is followed with a scoop cut out of the top. This, then, is covered with little silken ruffles, the edges pinked out instead of hemmed and a frill of narrow Valenciennes tacked beneath the pinking for a dainty effect. Permanently attached to one side of the [illegible] of the corset, the other side is provided with a snap hook upon the little bustle and a couple of little shield [illegible] upon the [illegible] so that when the garment is laced the little bustle is snapped into place and so "[illegible]."

This, of course, refers to the corset that laces up the back. Where the front [illegible]

Hints and Hintings for the Would-Be Fashion Wise.

Do You Know that shawls are coming into the highest vogue once more? Reports from the many haunts of fashion along the far famed Riviera denote that shawls of many kinds and characters are bound to flourish as occasional wraps and that everything from the daintiest and most fragile shoulder covering in filmy lace for the ballroom up to and including the famous and historic Scotch clan tartans are the choice of those who lead rather than follow the fashions.

Quite in Line with the foregoing are [illegible] in which those exquisitely embroidered Chinese silk shawls are used to delightful effect. One really beautiful example was worn at the opera just after New Years by a beauty whose family have many Spanish affiliations. In this instance the silk was a beautiful clear yellow in tone with embroideries of the same shade. The bodice was somewhat on the bebe order, the shawl with its original and intricately knotted fringe was arranged as an overdrapery for the skirt, the long strands of fringe falling over a foamy and frilly underskirt of chiffon ruffles.

And by the way these same ruffles were not of the stiff plisse order, with a bouillon edge that have really been done to death of late [illegible] but they were [illegible] of chiffon cut on the bias and shirred double, the raw [illegible] being turned under at the top and concealed by the shirring stitch.

The fact too, that the young person is admitted into general society to a large degree over here may account for the failure of several visiting opera stars to shine socially. Careful mothers do not wish that their daughters should come in close contact with women who resort habitually to the class of makeup which is relegated here to those beyond the pale of society and whose [illegible] society is likely to lead to misunderstandings.

The Peacock Shades are making valiant struggle for recognition. Like so many other modish hues it altogether depends upon the class of materials in which those shades are worn whether they are effective and becoming. In chiffon broadcloths they are highly effective, while in chiffon velvets they are more [illegible] a little [illegible] pink bows [illegible] in the same tints that the [illegible] in the days when the craze for the aesthetic was at its height.

A Symphony in Gray Velvet, Fur and Hand Embroideries

One hears so often of symphonies in color that this scribe sees no reason why symphonies in clothes should not receive as deep and [illegible] appreciation. Indeed, to so gown one's self that the entire effect is harmony is quite an artistic perception, an appreciation of modes and materials [illegible] as to form line color and last but by no means least social situation that it takes an artist of unusual quality to [illegible] success in this line.

On the Toilet Table.

One so often hears of peroxide blondes, as they term those women whose hirsute tresses owe their golden sheen to art rather than to nature, that in the distaste which such references and revelations bring about the many beneficial uses of this same agent are often lost sight of.

To bleach a skin that has been neglected until it has become [illegible] and muddy there is nothing to equal a medicinal hydrogen peroxide and the juice of a lemon. Be sure to get the medicinal quality and to keep it in a cool, dark place. Then rub a cut lemon over the face, the neck, hands and arms. Follow this with a liberal sponging of the peroxide, being careful not to get it on the eyebrows and lashes, and let this dry on the skin. Try this alternate days for a week or ten days, and then see the difference in your skin.

Your family physician will tell you that there is no better mouth wash and gargle than this same bleaching agent for it is a highly potent bactericide and detergent. For teeth too that have become dark and discolored a brisk brushing and rinsing with peroxide will work wonders and the combination of a bottle of peroxide and liberal supply of lemons is one that should never be omitted from the list of toilet agents.

Almond or olive oil is another aid to beauty and good looks that is not sufficiently appreciated. Some women prefer the one and some the other but a really good olive oil is thinner, spreads better and, finally, takes a trifle of perfume better than does the almond extract. The very pale green olive oils are far and away the best. Have your druggist put a single drop of attar of roses or a few drops of oil of geranium or bergamot if you like the odor and use this nightly.

In using oils the one thing is not to use too much. The skin, the hair and the scalp will absorb but so much, and that much is a mere trifle; any more makes the skin greasy and unattractive looking.

When the hair is beginning to get a little thin on the temples in front of and immediately behind the ears, a little oil, or even some vaseline, will prove delightfully efficient. Take a teaspoonful of the oil and heat it ever so slightly. Then just barely dip the tips of the fingers in this and massage in circles from the chin up, having first steamed the face over a bowl of boiling water and cleared the skin of dust. Pay especial attention to the points noted, and then continue the rubbing until the entire scalp has been covered. The hair line all around the place where age first begins to [illegible], will soon show good results in the [illegible] hair that will begin to sprout. While excellent for the hair, there is not the slightest danger of a good olive oil ever fostering a growth of superfluous hair on the cheeks or the chin where one does not want it at any price or at any cost.

HECTOR

By EDWARD OSTROM, Jr.

Copyright, 1906, by Thomas H. McKee.

The Complete Story of

"Hector," by Edward Ostrom, Jr., is notable both for its strength and its tenderness. The noble fire horse and his rough, rugged driver are brought before the reader in such manner as to win clear, understanding sympathy. The story is one that will appeal to the human side of every heart that has throbbed with quickened pulse as the clanging engines dashed by with their galloping horses and blue-shirted fire-fighters, seemingly stirred alike with eagerness to battle for the safety of imperilled lives.

The forceful pencil of L. Methfessel has illustrated "Hector" and has presented a worthy picture of the noble animal whose life-story is here related. It is a picture combining the fidelity of a brilliant photograph with the effect that could be produced only by the pencil of an artist whose soul is attuned to sympathy with the brute hero he portrays.

CLING! cling!" said the fire-bell with her silver voice. Cling! cling! cling! There's a fire not far away!—and the roof of the building is falling in!—and the smoke is pouring out of the window!—and ... with the women and children if you don't hurry up! Cling! Cling! Cling! Cling!

Hector strode out of his stall with a loud snort; a towering giant of a black horse, with fire in his eyes, and fire in his nostrils, and fire under his hoofs as he stepped. Tossing his head contemptuously, he took his place of honor between the poles of the engine, the other horses falling quickly in on either side of him, looking like ponies in comparison with their big leader. All were harnessed ready to go, before a label could have been burnt off a gasolene can. No. 10 was hissing spitefully, and Skinny, the driver, was settling himself comfortably upon the box. Hector, however, had been pawing the ground.

"Get up, Hec," said Skinny; "do you think this is a funeral?"

Hector tossed his giant head again, and pulled the engine and the other horses playfully out upon the street.

"All together now," said Skinny persuasively, as he shook out the long reins.

And with that they were off and away, with a wild clatter and ringing, up the long, crowded, startled thoroughfare.

Back of Skinny the men who a few moments before had been peacefully pulling at their corn-cob pipes and swapping stories with their friends, the boys of the neighborhood, were clinging with desperation to the poles of the roaring engine and hose-cart as they rushed down the crowded street, rocking around sharp corners and winding an intricate path to the scene of their duty.

"I wonder what's the matter with Skinny to-day," said big Bill Hoffman as he jammed his helmet tighter on his head. "He's driving wide everywhere—acts as though he was scared of something."

"Oh, you never can tell about Skinny," replied his companion. "He's the craziest kid on the works. Some days he drives as if there was a baby under the wheels all the time. Then again he's clippin' them Elevated pillars by fractions of an inch."

Weaving in and out through the congestion of the city's traffic Skinny was nevertheless driving his horses beautifully, now jamming down his brakes hard to avoid an over-impertinent trolley car that had run past its stopping point, and again giving Hector and his mates their heads as they dashed madly down an inviting stretch of asphalt.

Feet braced against the foot-board, sinewy hands straining with all their power against the excited horses, head bare to the rushing wind, eyes set to the front, never wavering; face stern with the responsibility that rests upon the man who is guiding a brazen comet through city streets crowded with eager spectators—this was Skinny.

"Looks like a soldier charging the enemy," said one man half to himself.

"You're right, sir, he is a soldier; but with these fellows death is all in the day's work," and his neighbor turned again as the battalion chief whirled clanging by in his buggy in the wake of the flying engine.

But with Skinny on the driver's seat it was different to-day. To the outsider Skinny was the same intrepid, keen-eyed driver who loves to show his daring and skill and devotion to duty. Even his comrades at the fire-house had noticed no marked difference, for he had always been an erratic lad and made few intimate friends. Hector was the only one to whom he had given all his heart and all his confidences.

"Yer safe if ye tell yer secrets to a horse," he often said, and then he had half laughed.

But the men knew that Hector was more to Skinny than a child would be to some men, and they respected him for it even if they joked with him about it.

And to-day with Skinny was different. A sense of calamity had been with him since morning, intangible, undefinable.

"Somethin's going to happen, old boy," he had murmured to Hector when he went to the big horse's stall in the morning.

Hector had sniffed at the back of Skinny's head while he poured out the oats, but had vouchsafed no answer. He was hungry for the oats and pawed impatiently at the floor.

"Somethin's sure goin' to happen," he said later and Hector had turned and whinnied to him while he polished the buckles and joints of his horse's harness.

"I feel just the way Johnny Burns did the day before the piano factory fell on him. Gee, I hope I ain't goin' to lose my nerve—or my horse," thought Skinny.

The alarm had come as a welcome relief from this gloomy foreboding.

Once on the seat Skinny was himself again almost, but as he threaded his way down the long street he found himself going over in memory the days since he and Hector had gone into the department.

Way down town they had met first—down in the newspaper section of the city—he a recruit, with lots to learn, and Hector a fine, big, upstanding five-year-old.

They had taken to each other from the very start, perhaps because they were both strangers and lonesome.

When on the late watch Skinny had acquired the habit of talking over with Hector the things he knew would interest him. Hector standing solemnly in his ... stall would ... his big head over the barrier and thrust his soft nose inquiringly into Skinny's hand. After the sugar had been eaten he would bow his head to show his gratitude.

It all came back to Skinny as on occasions a lifetime's memories will be packed into one brief moment. Skinny was driving to a fire but subconsciously he was living again his fireman's career with Hector.

When Hector had been transferred to the uptown station and had realized his good fortune Skinny's real face, there had seemed not much left in Skinny's life until someone—a man higher up—had been made to see that it would be a benefit to the service to have the two reunited. And reunited they were at last in a west side house.

Then had come the other incidents of their life together—the big apartment house fire when, with all the promotion he had always secretly longed for. How he and Hector could work together! No one else could manage the fiery horse so well and skilfully. There was the bond of friendship—of love between them. They understood each other.

Skinny was made driver of the engine after that—the windows spitting fire and smoke, Skinny had crawled slowly up the front of the building with his scaling ladder and brought down the old woman and her two little granddaughters. The next day the papers flamed with accounts of his heroism.

Hector it was after the long run to the car-barn fire last winter when the snow was deep in the side streets and the water frozen in glaciers over the pavements and walls, that seemed to know instinctively the peril of the tottering wall and communicated his fears to Skinny.

The pulsating, throbbing engine had been dragged away only a moment before the street was filled with a ruin of fallen and smoking brick.

Hector again responding to the firm but delicate guidance of his friend, had by his enormous strength alone swerved the engine from its course and barely clear of a big sight-seeing automobile filled with white-faced, frightened tourists. Skinny had grinned at them as he passed, but he knew only too well that it was Hector alone that had saved a half dozen lives, including probably his own.

Do you wonder that he loved his fine big horse! through all the best part of his life they had gone together—friends, sharing dangers, comforts and pleasures.

Out of his dream came Skinny with a shock. Round the last corner at the foot of the hill they dashed at reckless speed. The blue-coated policeman sprang out from the curb and shouted down the avenue to clear the way.

The whole street shrank out of the way, except one little baby girl with dazed eyes. Skinny stood up to the reins like a madman, his foot jammed on the brake.

"Whoa, Hector, you devil! whoa!" he cried hoarsely.

HE REARED UP READY TO FIGHT IT OUT, AND PAWED THE AIR WITH HIS TERRIBLE HOOFS.

The great horse gaped with the pain of the bit; and tried to hold back on his haunches. Plunger staggered on his left, but he held him up for several yards; then Boiler stumbled and fell with a crash. Hector was brought to his knees, Plunger went under the merciless wheels, and the engine came to a stop. It was all over as quick as a kiss. Plunger lay quivering with a broken back; Boiler was stone dead, his skull crushed in like an apple by Hector's terrible hoof; Hector himself, panting and sweating, stood bravely quiet with his knees shaved to the bone. And the tiny girl who a moment before had been smiling and happy, was safe on the sidewalk, her small face hidden in her frock, sobbing she scarce knew why.

Then Hector took the engine up the hill alone. His veins stood out so painfully beneath the strain, however the sweat poured over his muscular flanks so thickly, and the panting of his huge sides was so terrible to hear—that it seemed to poor Skinny as if his favorite, too, must kill himself before they reached the top. But the smell of the fire came to Hector, and he lifted his weary feet into a canter. The hoses soon stretched with a familiar quivering on every hand and the firemen were running ahead of him with their bright axes. He ... there in the thick of it at last—the red blood dripping from his nostrils.

"I want to take my horse home, sir," said Skinny to the chief, touching his hat.

"Why?"

Skinny explained his misfortune in short sentences.

"I might better killed the kid than that horse," he added sadly.

"Take him home, lad," said the Chief, wiping the smoke from his eyes. "I'll send someone up with your engine."

So Skinny took Hector by the bridle, and led him gently all the long way down the hill, sympathizing with him tenderly, and patting his soft nose as they went. Poor Hector could scarcely drag one hoof behind the other. At the foot of the hill the little girl, with screams of laughter, was tearing the yellow wings from a butterfly.

"Oh, poor hossie!" she cried, as Hector limped past with bleeding knees. But Skinny turned away his face and swore.

Upon reaching home, Hector gave a snort that was half a groan, and walking unsteadily into his own stall, leaned up against the side; and the boards cried out beneath his weight, and the stanchions shifted their feet unwillingly. Some oats were in the manger, wet and fragrant, though Hector cared not even to sniff at them, but let his huge head, a mountain in itself, droop lower and lower down.

"Poor old cuss," whispered Skinny, kissing the horse's nose furtively. "I hope to God yer ain't busted."

The man came slowly out of the stall; and the big horse lay heavily down and closed his eyes.

"Hector's busted," said Skinny, trying to explain the sorry situation in a business-like voice to the green hand who had been left on watch.

The latter tip-toed over to Hector's stall, and peered in mutely. Hector paid no attention to him. Skinny threw two blankets over the prostrate horse, and slid another rolled up for a pillow under his head. The flies were buzzing lazily over the fragrant oats.

Skinny, who seized every chance to swear at the green hand, phoned for a veterinary, and then stamped about like a baited bull, cursing the long delay. When the surgeon at last arrived with his little satchel, and looked at poor Hector with his cold, unsympathetic eyes, he pursed up his lips hopelessly, and shook his old bald head.

"He's pretty bad, ain't he?" blurted Skinny. "Oh, yes, I knew it—I felt sure from the first there wasn't no hope—oh, yes, I give him up clean from the start—"

Skinny's shoestring came untied as he spoke, and he was a long time fixing it. The veterinary, meanwhile, explained with obvious satisfaction that Hector had had a serious hemorrhage, and might even then be bleeding slowly to death inside.

"Keep him quiet," he said warningly.

But Hector showed no disposition to move, lying wearily with closed eyes and heavy breathing, oblivious to all that went on around him. Even toward evening when No. 10, grimy and unkempt, in tow of two strange horses came rumbling up to the door, he did not offer to raise his head. He did not lift his heavy eyelids when the clumsy newcomers staggered and stamped on the slippery concrete, in their violent straining to accomplish jointly what he could have done alone. He did not prick up his ears when the wondering men drew near, and staring at him in open pity, called "Hector!" softly with their well-known voices; and even when his good friend Scraggs, the spaghetti-covered dog mascot, floundered crab-fashion into the stall and sniffed noisily with tickley whiskers at the ice bandages, he gave no sign of life. Nothing seemed to affect him. So the men on tiptoe went soberly about their work of cleaning up; the flies continued to buzz undisturbed in Hector's manger; and Skinny, with blind eyes, made a mournful pretence at furbishing up the harness.

Suddenly, however, a strange thing happened. It was not that the alarm began to ring with its clear, glass-like note of warning—for that was a common, almost hourly occurrence—but there came a noise of a terrible effort from Hector's stall. Awakened at last by the familiar bell, the great horse seemed to be struggling to answer the summons. The straw flew furiously in all directions. The partition wall of the stall kicked loose by the mighty iron shoes, scaled over the concrete floor like a square of pasteboard. Hector, arising with a mighty groan, came forth.

But Hector staggered against Skinny, who rebounded backward against the tiled wall; then the horse came blundering forward, scattering fire with an unsteady tread. Disregarding the blindness of his eyes and the weakness of his knees, giant Hector took his accustomed place of honor between the poles of the engine. But no one came to fasten his harness; though he stretched out his neck for the collar, no collar was lowered upon it; and though he opened his mouth for the bit, no bit was placed between his teeth. Tottering then from side to side, the red blood pouring from his nostrils, he reared up ready to fight it out, and pawed the air with his terrible hoofs, falling at last, baffled but not conquered, upon the oaken pole of the engine, which snapped beneath his weight with a deafening crack. The glittering dragon leaped back out of danger; but it was a useless precaution, for Hector lay on the floor like a stone.

The men stepped forward and stared in silent wonder at the great quiet body, which nearly reached from the brass pole on their right to the brass pole on their left. The strange horses, in the dim light of their stalls, stood spectrally gazing out with outstretched necks and pricked up ears; Scraggs crouched in a shivering heap in the desolate stall, where the flies were buzzing, buzzing their mournful tune.

At last Skinny came limping forward, and knelt stiffly by the silent head.

"Hector's gone," he said presently, in a smothered voice.

EASTERN COLORADO FARM LANDS

WITHIN ONE MILE OF A GOOD RAILROAD STATION

PRICE ONLY $4.25 PER ACRE

This land must be sold as a whole. The party owning it will not sell any of it unless he sells the whole body together. There is $1.40 per acre that is payable to the Union Pacific Land company, in seven equal annual payments at 6 per cent interest, or can all be paid at any time, and the balance must be cash.

This is a splendid bargain, all tillable land, and water close to the surface. This land will sell for $10 per acre inside of one year. Any man who has the money to handle this proposition cannot find as desirable an investment in the state of Colorado. If you buy this proposition of me you will have to buy it quick, as I leave in a few days to be absent probably some time.

BIG DEPOSITS IN ENTERPRISE

Large Reserves Have Been Exposed at Different Levels.

BOULDER, Colo., Jan. 19.—One of the best mines in the Boulder mineral district, is said to be the Enterprise. It has a shaft 400 feet deep from which a number of levels have been driven, exposing large reserves. It is said that the ore bodies are from two to ten feet wide, which show values in sylvanite and tellurium of $10 to $40 per ton. In one place there was a vein 20 feet wide from which 1,000 tons were extracted and milled, returning an average of $10 gold per ton. The Enterprise company at its annual meeting held in Boulder a few days ago, elected Howard H. Carpenter president and general manager, and J. E. Carpenter secretary and treasurer. These men and their associates in the directorate have acquired a controlling interest in the property by purchase and are working it in a manner to secure good results.

John L. Gordon of Denver, and associates, having purchased the Golden Age mine at Jamestown, have also taken over the Standard mill on Jim Creek, below Springdale, and will remodel it to treat the vast tonnage of material in the Golden Age dumps. A. W. Widdefield, manager of the Golden Eagle at Collins, is taking out ore—specimen ore—that runs $7,300 per ton.

NEVADA-ELY COPPER STOCK WILL BE ADVANCED IN PRICE WEDNESDAY JANUARY 23

All of the three-cent stock will be taken within the next two days, after which time no more will be sold at that price.

Some of the officers of this company will go to Ely this week to make final arrangements to begin the work of drilling and putting down the large, double-compartment shaft to the ore. Judging from the way other stocks in the vicinity are selling our stock should easily go to one dollar per share and beyond when we reach the blanket copper formation that underlies the camp.

We received word yesterday that a rich strike had been made in claims at a considerable distance from the center of the territory and away beyond our ground, proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the property of this company is in the center of the best part of the territory.

To give you an idea of how copper stocks in the Ely, Nevada, district are selling we quote the market value of a few of the properties.

Ely-Central Copper Company which joins our property and is capitalized at $12,000,000 is selling on the market at $6.50 per share.

Giroux Consolidated, which is only a short distance from our property, is selling at $14.50 per share on a capitalization of $5,000,000.

Nevada Consolidated, which adjoins the Ely Central, and is capitalized at $6,500,000, is selling at $23.50 per share)

Cumberland Ely, which joins Nevada Consolidated, is capitalized at $5,000,000, and shares are selling at $14 each. Other stocks in the district are selling as follows:

Colorado-Ely Copper Co., $3.00 per share
Jeldness Copper Co., $3.00 per share
Ely-Nevada Copper Co. $1.75 per share
Ely-Mines Copper Co., $5.50 per share
Nevada Northern Copper Co., $1.00 per share
Ely Turner Copper Co., $5.00 per share
United Ely Copper Co., $1.00 per share
Butte-Ely Copper Co., $3 per share
Ely-Witch, $1.95 per share

Mining experts say that the property of the Nevada-Ely Copper Company is as well located as any property in the district that is selling from $1.00 to $23.00 per share. Our capitalization is among the smallest in the district. Is there any reasonable reason why the stock in this company should not be selling at from 1.00 and upwards in a few months time. We intend to put every effort into making the Nevada-Ely one of the big copper mines of the country.

The demand for copper is growing greater all the time, and the metal has been advancing rapidly in price until it is now selling close to 25 cents per pound. This fact alone is bound to make all copper stocks advance.

The new copper camp of Ely, Nevada, is pronounced by experts to be the greatest copper district ever discovered. A known area of several miles wide and fourteen miles long has been proven to be underlaid with a blanket copper formation which has been prospected to a depth of 1,000 feet without striking the bottom of the ore. In fact some of the richest ore has been found at the lowest depths. With the ore that is in sight now it will be impossible to work out the copper ore in hundreds of years, making Ely mines dividend payers for hundreds of years. We are advising our friends to go into this proposition because we can see no possible reason for failure.

The Nevada Ely Company has 200 acres free and clear, and is capitalized at 3,000,000 shares. Par value $1.00. Shares will be sold up to Wednesday of this week for three cents, after which the price will be advanced. Orders are now being taken and stock will be ready for delivery about February 5. GOOD ORE IN TRILBY

WILL RUN OVER FIFTY DOLLARS IN CAR LOTS.

Much Dead Work Being Done in This and Ben Harrison Lode Claims, Awaiting New Hoist.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Jan. 19.—J. T. Stewart, manager of the Trilby Mines company, which a few months ago purchased the Trilby and Ben Harrison lode claims from the Moose company, is breaking ore and doing a lot of dead work in the property while waiting for the new hoist, which is expected to arrive daily. The shaft on the Trilby has been sunk to a depth of 861 feet and several new ore bodies have recently been uncovered. No attempt has as yet been made to ship any ore, which, judging from assay reports, will give values in carload lots of from $50 to $60 in gold to the ton. The ore shows a quantity of sylvanite, and the Trilby promises to be one of the heaviest and best shippers of ore in the camp as soon as the new machinery can be installed. Mr. Stewart now has a force of men divided, some doing dead work and the others on ore.

The machinery has been delayed, expected to arrive from Pennsylvania. While here, it is quite probable that the operators will decide if they will lease any of the ground. If they do reach such a conclusion, leases will probably be limited to the 500-foot level from the surface.

TRAMWAYS ARE BEING BUILT

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Jan. 19.—Work is progressing satisfactorily at the Little Giant cyanide mill, located about two miles down Pony gulch. General Manager C. B. Burch is now having constructed two tramways, one 140 feet long and the other about 100 feet in length. These trams were found to be necessary for handling of custom ore. The Little Giant is treating from 50 to 70 tons of ore a day of an oxidized low grade value, but the mill is handling it nicely and getting splendid extraction. The Little Giant plant ranks as one of the finest and most up-to-date cyanide mills ever erected in the Cripple Creek district. In the spring it is quite likely that this company will build an aerial tramway connecting with the mill and the principal mines and hills of the camp.

Starting early in February, the mill will probably be in shape to handle at least 500 tons daily of custom ore. Several good contracts have been made and the plant should be running well up to capacity for the balance of the year.

SIX SETS OF LESSEES AT WORK

Anaconda Portion of the Mary McKinney Company Shipping Out Ore of Rich Grade.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Jan. 19.—The Anaconda portion of the Mary McKinney Consolidated Mining company, on the south slope of Gold hill, is being worked by some half dozen sets of lessees, all of whom are shipping out ore running from $20 to $60 in gold to the ton. Most of the operators are operating near the surface and through the Anaconda tunnel. The tonnage is large at this time. The Mary McKinney company, it is understood, is driving from the lower levels of the McKinney into the Anaconda on good ore bodies of a rich grade.

At the McKinney proper, the company is shipping out monthly about 1,200 tons of ore, and the average grade is understood to be about two ounces in gold to the ton. The ore is said to be mined from the sixth, seventh and eighth levels of the property, a considerable distance north of the shaft.

C. K. & N. STOCKHOLDERS HOLD SPECIAL MEETING.

Nevada Holdings Turned Over to Gold Coin Company for Stock Consideration.

At a special stockholders' meeting of the C. K. and N. Mining company in the offices of Secretary K. Macdermid, in the Mining Exchange building, yesterday morning, the Goldfield, Nev., property of the company was transferred to the Gold Coin Mining company for a stock consideration.

The latter company, which was recently organized in Wyoming with a capitalization of $2,000,000, divided into as many shares of a par value of $1 each, is comprised of practically the same stockholders as is the C. K. and N. company. The Nevada property was transferred to the new company in order that it may be worked under a management separate from that of the Cripple Creek property of the C. K. and N. company on Beacon hill.

Of the 2,000,000 shares of capital stock, the Gold Coin company gives 1,439,000 to the C. K. and N. organization, which declares a stock dividend of the shares. Of the 561,000 shares of stock remaining in the Gold Coin treasury, the C. K. and N. stockholders have subscribed for 100,000 shares at 10 cents per share, making a working capital of $10,000 cash already in the Gold Coin treasury.

The Nevada property comprises the Gold Coin and Great Western claims, 30 acres adjoining the famous Combination mine on the south. A shaft on the Gold Coin has been sunk to a depth of 200 feet, and has cut a big ledge of low-grade ore. The values returned run as high as $40 and $45 per ton, but the average is below this figure. It is intended to sink another 100 feet before crosscutting on the ledge. The ore was exposed in sinking the shaft, no lateral work having been done prior to its discovery.

W. H. Davis, of Denver, is president of both the C. K. and N. and the Gold Coin companies. K. Macdermid, of this city, is secretary of the C. K. and N. company, Miss Ethel Wiltshire, of Denver, is secretary of the Gold Coin.

NEW CAMP IN GUNNISON

Located in Box Canon District Between Bowerman and Ohio City. Has Come to Stay.

PITKIN, Colo., Jan. 18.—A new mining camp has been established in the Box Canon district, between Bowerman and Ohio City. It is also near Pitkin and Doyle, in the central part of Gunnison county. From reports the new camp has excellent prospects and has come to stay. It is located in a box canon, from which it derives its name. Several very good mineral discoveries have been made recently, which are attracting much attention.

Among the Denverites interested in the new camp are ex-Fire Chief W. E. Roberts and son, V. E. Roberts, Thomas J. Kane, ex-state boiler inspector, and Dick Gibbons. The Roberts group of properties show enormous veins. One is from 75 to 100 feet wide and crops at the surface for nearly 4,000 feet. This is schist matter mixed with quartz. Another vein or ledge is 50 feet across and is composed of quartz, principally. There are other strong leads cutting through the formation, which show values. Tests made on some of these veins return $12 in gold per ton. Picked samples go much higher.

Among the new companies in the field are the Santa Fe Mining and Milling company, representing Pueblo capital. It has a group of properties which is being operated and which show well. Another is the Kentucky Mines and Milling company, representing Manzanola parties. This concern also has a splendid group of properties which are being operated.

BEST STRIKE OF 1907

WABASH COMPANY MAKES A GOOD FIND.

Streak from One to Four Inches Which Shows Free and Rusty Gold Mixed With Sylvanite.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Jan. 19.—Among the strikes which have been made this year and already there are recorded some half a dozen good strikes in 1907, the one made by the Wabash Mining & Leasing company on the Agnes of the Four Brothers gives promise of ranking at the very top. At a depth of 350 feet over two and one half feet of ore has been uncovered a short distance from the shaft. There is a streak from one to four inches wide that shows free and rusty gold mixed with sylvanite that give assay returns of about $1,200 in gold to the ton. On either side of the streak for a foot the ore will run $180, while the balance of the vein matter will give returns of not less than two ounces. A shipment is now being prepared and it promises to give values at the rate of $200 in gold to a ton.

Not content to devote all the time to the ore already found, a winze was sunk a short distance which showed that the ore was getting better clear across the vein and one-half feet as it went down, much better than above, so the company has begun the sinking of the shaft another lift of 50 feet, which will make the workings 400 feet when this work is completed. The company proposes to ship from its very rich strike, but the general opinion with them is that the values will be more even and greatly increased when the ore is cut below.

JERRY JOHNSON LOOKS WELL

Lease Is Shipping Out Several Cars a Month That Will Run Close to Two Ounces.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Jan. 19.—The Jerry Johnson on Ironclad hill, which is under lease to Henry Dahl, is looking better than it has for a long time. New machinery has recently replaced that burned down and the lease is shipping out several cars of ore a month that will run around the two ounce mark. Occasionally a much richer grade shipment is consigned to the mills or samplers. The ore for the most part is coming from a good sized vein which was opened up at a depth of 500 feet. Some ore is being mined from two or three other places in this well-known property. Mr. Dahl expects shortly to materially increase his tonnage. The ore values are increasing slightly as work progresses.

FIND VEIN THREE FEET WIDE

Proper and Monarch Claims Yielding One of Two-Ounce Grade.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Jan. 19.—McLeod, Lewis and Jones, operating on the Proper and Monarch claims of the Stratton estate on the northeast slope of Gold hill, are getting out a shipment of ore that ought to give returns of about two ounces in gold to the ton. At a depth of 250 feet they have recently opened up a vein of from two to three feet wide. This is the same shoot undoubtedly that was found at a depth of 50 feet by the Union Leasing company on the same property. The Union lease is limited to 100 feet. Messrs. McLeod and Lewis then drove a crosscut from the Monarch shaft about 175 feet and caught the ore shoot which showed much better veins, but which had narrowed down at depth. These lessees have ore in another portion of their lease, but have not made any attempt to ship ore during the course of development work.

STOCK PRICES BREAK

MARKET UNDERGOES SEVERE PRESSURE.

Further Liquidation Has Telling Effect—Closing Tone Strong, Although Feverish.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19.—The stock market underwent severe pressure from further liquidation today. Prices broke again and again under the renewed flood of stock which poured upon the market. There was an evident determination, however to protect the market, and supporting orders appeared at each decline to arrest the downward tendency and rally prices. The nature of this buying was indicated by this withdrawal when it had effected its purpose of steadying the market. It was not pursued at the advance when prices approached last night's level. The market closed with such a supporting movement in progress and the tone was consequently strong at a final rally, although extremely feverish and very active.

Many diligent inquiries were set on foot as a result of these rumors, and clearing house and banking authorities gave their sanction to assurances that no evidence of embarrassment was discoverable. The principal selling pressure centered on Reading, Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and after a show of strength, St. Paul.

The market showed the most acute weakness after the appearance of the bank statement when numerous offerings of the stocks above named came upon the market. The $18,198,000 cash gain by the banks was much in excess of expectations. The $15,148,000 loan increase fas attributed to a large transfer of loans from London to this market. The continued strength of foreign exchange indicated extension of this process. The money rate rose also in London. The apparent concert of unfavorable criticism of American securities and finance by the foreign press is a depressing factor, owing to its probable discouraging effect on any intended purchase by foreigners of American securities. An underlying influence on the readjustment of prices in progress is the contrast of the greater attractions to be offered by new securities and the disposition to provide means for taking them up by liquidation of outstanding securities at a correspondingly higher range of prices. The total sales of bonds par value $1,512,000.

WHEAT MARKET STRONG

NEWS OF DAY LARGELY OF A BULLISH CHARACTER.

Main Factor in Situation Is Weather in Winter Wheat Belt—Corn Market Strong.

CHICAGO, Jan. 19.—The wheat market was strong all day on an active demand by shorts and commission houses. There was very little selling on short account. The greater part of the offerings came from outside sources. The news of the day was largely of a bullish character. One of the main factors in the situation was the weather in the winter wheat belt. The market closed strong. May opened unchanged at 1-8c higher at 76 3-4@76 7-8, advanced to 77 1-2 and closed at the highest price.

Mild wet weather throughout the winter belt caused free buying of corn today and brought about a strong market. The market closed strong.

May opened a shade to 1-4c higher at 45 to 45 1-8@45 1-4, advanced to 45 3-8@45 5-8 and closed at 45 3-8.

At the close May pork was off 5c at $16.42 1-2. Lard was shade lower at $9.42 1-2 and ribs unchanged at $9.10.
